SEC. 3002. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) there are large number of substance abusers in the United States seriously enough impaired to require treatment;

(2) of these abusers, only a small fraction is currently receiving treatment;

(3) substance abuse treatment facilities in the United States are operating above full capacity and many individuals who desire treatment must wait long periods of time before they receive treatment;

(4) drug abuse and the lack of adequate treatment programs poses a threat to our most precious resource, our young people, with almost two-thirds of the graduating high school class of 1985 having used an illicit drug and 17 percent having used cocaine;

(5) increased drug use is strongly linked to violent, gang-related and addiction-related crime; and

(6) treatment for substance abuse is cost-effective and in the best interest of society and the individual.

SEC. 3003. PURPOSES.

(a) Alcohol and Drug Abuse.—It is the purpose of this title to—

(1) continue and expand the partnership that exists between the Federal Government and the States in the development, maintenance, and improvement of the national network of comprehensive, community-based alcohol and drug abuse programs;

(2) provide financial and technical assistance to States and communities to assist in the development and maintenance of a core of prevention services that will significantly reduce the number and scope of alcohol and drug abuse problems;

(3) assist and encourage States in the initiation and expansion of prevention and treatment services for underserved populations;

(4) increase the understanding of the public concerning the extent of alcohol and other forms of drug abuse throughout the United States and the need for appropriate treatment services through—

(A) the expansion of data collection activities; and

(B) the support of research on the comparative cost and efficacy of existing alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment services; and

(5) increase to the greatest extent possible the availability and quality of treatment services so that treatment on request may be provided to all individuals desiring to rid themselves of their substance abuse problem.

(b) Mental Health.—It is the purpose of this title to—

(1) encourage the development and provision of community mental health services by the States;

(2) encourage the development of a comprehensive community mental health system within each State;

(3) encourage the implementation of new and expanded community mental health services;

(4) encourage States to provide community mental health services in the least restrictive appropriate environment, and to involve the families of individuals undergoing mental health treatment in the development and provision of such services;

(5) encourage States to ensure respect for the rights and needs of recipients of mental health services and to involve such recipients in the development and provision of services, including the development of client-run services;

(6) foster interagency coordination and integration among a broad range of human service providers, support groups, and advocates to ensure that mental health, rehabilitation, vocational, educational, health, and residential services are available to individuals who need such services;

(7) provide Federal assistance to expand community mental health services within each State; and

(8) increase the understanding of the public concerning the extent of mental illness throughout the United States and the need for appropriate treatment services through—

(A) the expansion of data collection activities; and

(B) the support of research on the comparative cost and efficacy of existing mental health services.

SEC. 3004. SENSE OF CONGRESS.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds that—

(1) alcoholism and other drug dependencies are problems of grave concern and consequence in American society;

(2) the social and economic costs of alcoholism and other drug dependencies, particularly to the health care system, are staggering;

(3) the health consequences of alcoholism and other drug dependencies can be as formidable as those of other diseases;

(4) in 1970, the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism was created within the Public Health Service, to finance treatment, research, and prevention initiatives;

(5) in 1973, the National Institute on Drug Abuse was created to focus on issues concerning drug abuse treatment, research and prevention;

(6) in 1976, alcoholics and other drug dependent individuals were included within the definition of disabled persons under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973;

(7) Congress itself, as well as organizations such as the American Medical Association, the National Council on Alcoholism, the National Association of Addiction Treatment Providers and the American Medical Society on Alcoholism and Other Drug Dependencies have recognized that alcoholism and other drug dependencies are treatable diseases; and

(8) the public and private sectors endeavor to treat Americans who suffer from these diseases.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) alcoholism and drug dependencies are treatable diseases; and

(2) treatment opportunities, in both the public and private sectors can provide a successful means of recovery from alcoholism and other drug dependencies and are essential elements to solving the nation's drug problem.

(a) FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(2) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to urge the United States Government, to the maximum extent practicable, to seek the active cooperation of other countries in the enforcement of these statutes, since only a truly multilateral approach can be effective in eliminating bank haven loopholes through which money launderers can escape.

(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERNATIONAL AGENCY.—The Congress urges the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate with finance ministers of foreign countries to establish an international currency control agency to—

(1) serve as a central source of information and database for international drug enforcement agencies;

(2) collect and analyze currency transaction reports filed by member countries; and

(3) encourage the adoption, by member countries, of uniform cash transaction and money laundering statutes.

(2) such conference should involve the heads of state, the highest-ranking law enforcement officers, and other appropriate officials from every government in the Western Hemisphere that is willing to combat the drug trade, and whose cooperation the President determines is essential to that goal; and

(3) such conference should focus exclusively on combatting the drug trade and, in particular, should emphasize enhancing cooperative efforts among the governments of the Western Hemisphere to—

(A) substantially reduce the production, cultivation, and processing of illicit drugs;

(B) eliminate the transshipment of such drugs through countries in the Western Hemisphere;

(C) curb the demand for and use of such drugs in every country in the Western Hemisphere;

(D) combat the problems of drug-related corruption and drug money laundering; and

(a) REVIEW.—The President shall conduct a review of United States narcotics raw material policy to determine—

(2) whether the United States should continue to rely on a single foreign country for all its licit opium gum;

(3) whether it should be United States policy to encourage all countries which produce licit opium to use the concentrated poppy straw method of production; and

(4) what options are available, consistent with treaties to which the United States is a party, to reduce United States reliance on licit opium gum from foreign sources.

The results of this review shall be reported to the Congress six months after the date of enactment of this Act.

Subtitle E—Transportation Industry Alcohol and Controlled Substances Testing Program

SEC. 5251. TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY ALCOHOL AND CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES TESTING PROGRAM.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) alcohol and drug abuse poses significant dangers to the safety and welfare of the Nation;

(2) millions of the Nation's citizens utilize transportation by aircraft, railroads, trucks, and buses, and depend on the operators of aircraft, railroads, trucks, and buses to perform in a safe and responsible manner;

(3) the greatest efforts must be expended to eliminate the abuse of alcohol and use of illegal drugs, whether on duty or off duty, by those individuals who are involved in the operation of aircraft, railroads, trucks, and buses;

(4) the use of alcohol and illegal drugs has been demonstrated to affect significantly the performance of individuals, and has been proven to have been a critical factor in transportation accidents;

(5) adequate safeguards can be implemented to ensure that testing for abuse of alcohol or use of illegal drugs is performed in a manner which protects an individual's right of privacy, ensures that no individual is harassed by being treated differently from other individuals, and ensures that no individual's reputation or career development is unduly threatened or harmed; and

(6) rehabilitation is a critical component of any testing program for abuse of alcohol or use of illegal drugs, and should be made available to individuals, as appropriate.

(b) TESTING PROGRAM.—(1) Title VI of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 App. U.S.C. 1421 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"ALCOHOL AND CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES TESTING

"TESTING PROGRAM

"SEC. 613. (a)(1) The Administrator shall, in the interest of aviation safety, prescribe regulations within twelve months after the date of enactment of this section. Such regulations shall establish a program which requires air carriers and foreign air carriers to conduct pre-employment, periodic recurring, random and post-accident testing of airmen, crewmembers, airport security screening contract personnel, and other air carrier employees responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator), and testing of such individuals upon a reasonable suspicion that they have used, without lawful authorization, alcohol or a controlled substance.

"(2) The Administrator shall establish a program applicable to employees of the Federal Aviation Administration whose duties include responsibility for safety-sensitive functions. Such program shall provide for pre-employment, periodic recurring, random and post-accident testing, and testing of such individuals upon a reasonable suspicion that they have used, without lawful authorization, alcohol or a controlled substance.

"(3) In prescribing regulations under the programs required by this subsection, the Administrator shall require, as the Administrator considers appropriate, the suspension or revocation of any certificate issued to such an individual, or the disqualification or dismissal of any such individual, in accordance with the provisions of this section, in any instance where a test conducted and confirmed under this section indicates that such individual has used, without lawful authorization, alcohol or a controlled substance.

"PROHIBITION ON SERVICE

"(b)(1) No person may use, without lawful authorization, alcohol or a controlled substance after the date of enactment of this section and serve as an airman, crewmember, airport security screening contract personnel, air carrier employee responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator), or employee of the Federal Aviation Administration with responsibility for safety-sensitive functions.

"(2) No individual who is determined to have used, without lawful authorization, alcohol or a controlled substance after the date of enactment of this section shall serve as an airman, crewmember, airport security screening contract personnel, air carrier employee responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator), or employee of the Federal Aviation Administration with responsibility for safety-sensitive functions unless such individual has completed a program of rehabilitation described in subsection (c) of this section.

"(3) Any such individual determined by the Administrator to have used, without lawful authorization, alcohol or a controlled substance after the date of enactment of this section who (A) refuses to undertake a rehabilitation program described in subsection (c), (B) fails to complete such a rehabilitation program, (C) has previously undertaken or completed such a rehabilitation program, or (D) has been determined by the Administrator to have served as an airman, crewmember, airport security screening contract personnel, air carrier employee responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Adminstrator), or employee of the Federal Aviation Administration with responsibility for safety-sensitive functions while impaired by or under the influence of alcohol or a controlled substance, shall not be permitted to perform the duties relating to air transportation which such individual performed prior to the date of such determination.

"PROGRAM FOR REHABILITATION

"(c)(1) Each air carrier and foreign air carrier shall establish and maintain a rehabilitation program which at a minimum provides for the identification and opportunity for treatment of employees referred to in subsection (b) of this section in need of assistance in resolving problems with the use, without lawful authorization, of alcohol or controlled substances. Each air carrier and foreign air carrier is encouraged to make such program available to all of its employees other than employees referred to in subsection (b) of this section. Nothing in this subsection shall preclude any air carrier or foreign air carrier from establishing a program under this subsection in cooperation with any other air carrier or foreign air carrier.

"(2) The Administrator shall establish and maintain a rehabilitation program which at a minimum provides for the identification and opportunity for treatment of those employees of the Federal Aviation Administration whose duties include responsibility for safety-sensitive functions who are in need of assistance in resolving problems with the use of alcohol or controlled substances.

"PROCEDURES

"(d) In establishing the program required under subsection (a) of this section, the Administrator shall develop requirements which shall—

"(B) specify the drugs for which individuals may be tested; and

"(C) establish appropriate standards and procedures for periodic review of laboratories and criteria for certification and revocation of certification of laboratories to perform drug testing in carrying out this section;

"(3) provide that all tests which indicate the use, without lawful authorization, of alcohol or a controlled substance by any individual shall be confirmed by a scientifically recognized method of testing capable of providing quantitative data regarding alcohol or a controlled substance;

"(4) require that all laboratories involved in the testing of any individual under this section shall have the capability and facility, at such laboratory, of performing screening and confirmation tests;

"(5) provide for the confidentiality of test results and medical information (other than information relating to alcohol or a controlled substance) of employees, except that the provisions of this paragraph shall not preclude the use of test results for the orderly imposition of appropriate sanctions under this section; and

"(6) ensure that employees are selected for tests by nondiscriminatory and impartial methods, so that no employee is harassed by being treated differently from other employees in similar circumstances.

"EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS AND REGULATIONS

"(e)(1) No State or local government shall adopt or put into effect any law, rule, regulation, ordinance, standard or order that is inconsistent with the regulations promulgated under this section, except that the regulations promulgated under this section shall not be construed to preempt provisions of State criminal law which impose sanctions for reckless conduct leading to actual loss of life, injury or damage to property, whether the provisions apply specifically to employees of an air carrier or foreign air carrier, or to the general public.

"(2) Nothing in this section shall preclude the Administrator from adopting or continuing in effect other regulations intended to protect persons or property on the ground or in the air from the hazards to safety associated with the potential use of alcohol or controlled substances by airmen, crewmembers, airport security screening contract personnel, air carrier employees responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator), or employees of the Federal Aviation Administration) with responsibility for safetv-sensitive functions.

"(3) In prescribing regulations under this section, the Administrator shall only establish requirements applicable to foreign air carriers that are consistent with the international obligations of the United States, and the Administrator shall take into consideration any applicable laws and regulations of foreign countries. The Secretary of State and the Secretary of Transportation, jointly, shall call on the member countries of the International Civil Aviation Organization to strengthen and enforce existing standards to prohibit the use, without lawful authorization, of a controlled substance by crew members in international civil aviation.

(ii) disqualification for an established period of time or dismissal of any such employee determined to have used a controlled substance, whether on duty or not on duty, except as permitted for medical purposes by law or any regulation.

(B) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to supercede any penalty applicable to an urban mass transportation employee under any other provision of law.

(7) For purposes of this subsection, the term—

(A) "controlled substance" means any substance under section 102(6) of the Controlled Substance Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)) whose use the Secretary has determined poses a risk to transportation safety; and

(b) "urban mass transportation" means all forms of urban mass transportation whose employees are not covered by either section 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431) or section 12020 of the Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-570; 100 State. 5223), as added by this section.

(8) A person shall not be eligible for Federal financial assistance under sections 3, 9, or 18 of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 (49 App. U.S.C. 1602, 1607a, or 1604) or section 103(e)(4) of title 23, United States Code, if such person—

(A) is required, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary under section 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431), section 12020 of the Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-570; 100; Stat. 5223), as added by this section, or subsection (e) of this section, to establish a program of alcohol and controlled substances testing; and

(B) fails to establish such a program in accordance with such regulations.

(g) For purposes of this section, the term—

(1) "person" includes any corporation, partnership, joint venture, association, or other entity organized or existing under the laws of the United States, or any State, commonwealth, territory, district, or possession thereof, or of any foreign country; and

(2) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation.

Subtitle F—Federal Privileges and Benefits

SEC. 5301. FEDERAL PRIVILEGES AND BENEFITS.

(a) List of Privileges and Benefits Recommended for Withholding.—(1) The Director of National Drug Control Policy shall, upon consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Attorney General, submit to the Congress no later than 12 months after the enactment of this title a list of any Federal privileges, benefits, grants, and loans, which, if withheld from individuals convicted of a Federal or State drug offense, would significantly deter the use of illegal drugs in the United States. The Director shall not include in the list any grants, loans, and benefits which the Director determines to be essential to the health or well being of the recipient or beneficiary.

(2) The Director shall accompany the list with a report exploring the potential benefits and liabilities of the withholding of privileges, benefits, grants, and loans in the Federal effort to fight substance abuse and explaining the reasoning behind the selection of each of the privileges, benefits, grants, and loans included in the list.

(b) Preparation of List.—(1) In preparing the list and report provided for in subsection (a), the Director shall take into consideration the following factors:

(A) the extent to which the threat of punishment deters drug use among persons addicted to drugs.

(B) the extent to which the threat of withholding Federal privileges, benefits, grants, and loans would be likely to deter individuals from using illicit drugs.

(C) the effect that withholding benefits would have on an individual's efforts to overcome drug dependence.

(D) whether differing State laws with regard to possession of marijuana would result in the uneven application of sanctions imposed by the Federal government.

(E) the potential results of such a program in areas with limited treatment and rehabilitation opportunities.

(F) the burden that should appropriately be placed on individuals applying for Federal privileges, benefits, grants, and loans to prove they have not been convicted of a drug offense.

(G) the means by which Federal and State agencies, courts, and law enforcement agencies will exchange and share the data and information necessary to implement and enforce the withholding of benefits, privileges, grants, and loans.

(2) The Director is authorized to conduct public hearings and such other activities as may be necessary to fulfill this charge.

"(1) a violation of the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951-970) punishable by imprisonment for more than 1 year;

"(2) a criminal violation of the Bank Secrecy Act (31 U.S.C. 5311-5324) punishable by imprisonment for more than 1 year; or

"(3) a criminal violation of the Money Laundering Control Act (18 U.S.C. 1956, 1957) and any criminal violation of provisions of title 31, United States Code, relating to money laundering, punishable by imprisonment for more than 1 year; where the violator used a passport or otherwise crossed an international border in committing such violation, the Secretary of State shall revoke the violator's passport and other travel documents. Any person whose passport or other travel documents were revoked under this subsection, or any person convicted for any offense in paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of this section who does not possess a passport, shall not be eligible to receive a passport or other travel documents for 10 years. The period of revocation shall begin after the individual completes the period of incarceration, probation, or parole imposed for conviction of any offense in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3).

"(b) The Secretary of State is authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.".

Subtitle H—Authorization of Appropriations for President's Media Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention

(1) $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989;

(2) $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990; and

(3) $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991.

TITLE VI—SENSE OF THE CONGRESS ON DRUG FUNDING

SEC. 6001. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS ON DRUG FUNDING.

It is the Sense of the Congress that—

(1) total authorizations in this Act and subsequent fiscal year 1989 appropriations shall provide that 60 percent of these incremental anti-drug funds shall be provided for drug prevention, treatment, and education programs and that 40 percent of the funds shall be provided for anti-drug law enforcement programs;

(2) the fiscal year 1989 appropriations for these authorizations shall include obligation limitations to the extent necessary to avoid triggering a sequester in fiscal year 1989;

(3) if obligational limitations in appropriations Acts become necessary, they shall have the net effect of providing 50 percent of the available fiscal year 1989 outlays for anti-drug law enforcement programs (up to the amount authorized in this Act) and 50 percent (or any authorized amounts remaining in this Act after all amounts for law enforcement have been appropriated) for drug prevention, treatment, and education programs;

(4) should obligational limitations in appropriations Acts be imposed for fiscal year 1989, subsequent obligations of remaining budget authority provided in this Act shall be made so as to ensure that, overall, 60 percent of the budget authority will be provided for drug prevention, treatment, and education programs and 40 percent shall be provided for anti-drug law enforcement programs; and

(5) revenues from an Internal Revenue Service enforcement and collections initiative and increased receipts from additional United States Attorneys used to improve processing of forfeited assets through the assets forefeiture fund should be used to offset spending associated with this Act.

TITLE VII A—DEATH PENALTY IN CASE OF DRUG-RELATED KILLINGS

SEC. 7001. DEATH PENALTY FOR DRUG-RELATED KILLINGS.

(a) Elements of Offense.—Section 408 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 848) is amended—

(1) by redesigning subsection (e) as subsection (f); and

(2) by adding a new subsection (e) as follows:

"Death Penalty

"(e)(1) In addition to the other penalties set forth in this section—

"(a) Any person engaging in a continuing criminal enterprise, or anyone working in furtherance of a continuing criminal enterprise who intentionally, or with reckless indifference to human life, kills or participates substantially in the killing of any individual, shall be sentenced to any term of imprisonment, which shall not be less than 20 years, and which may be up to life imprisonment, or may be sentenced to death; and

"(b) Any person, during the commission of, in furtherance of, or while attempting to avoid apprehension, prosecution, or service of a prison sentence for, a felony violation of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.) who intentionally, or with reckless indifference to human life, kills or participates substantially in the killing of any federal, state, or local law enforcement officer engaged in, or on account of, the performance of such officer's official duties, shall be sentenced to any term of imprisonment, which shall not be less than 20 years, and which may be up to life imprisonment, or may be sentenced to death.

"(2) As used in paragraph (1)(b), a 'law enforcement officer' is a public servant authorized by law or by a Government agency or Congress to conduct or engage in the prevention, investigation, prosecution, or adjudication of an offense, and includes those engaged in corrections, probation, or parole functions.".

(b) Procedure Applicable With Respect to the Death Penalty.—Section 408 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 848) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"Hearing Required with Respect to the Death Penalty

"(g) A person shall be subjected to the penalty of death for any offense under this section only if a hearing is held in accordance with this section.

"Notice by the Government in Death Penalty Cases

"(h)(1) Whenever the Government intends to seek the death penalty for an offense under this section for which one of the sentences provided is death, the attorney for the Government, a reasonable time before trial or acceptance by the court of a plea of guilty, shall sign and file with the court, and serve upon the defendant, a notice—

"(A) that the Government in the event of conviction will seek the sentence of death; and

"(B) setting forth the aggravating factors enumerated in subsection (n) and any other aggravating factors which the Government will seek to prove as the basis for the death penalty.

"(2) The court may permit the attorney for the Government to amend this notice for good cause shown.

"Hearing Before Court or Jury

"(i)(1) When the attorney for the Government has filed a notice as required under subsection (h) and the defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense under subsection (e), the judge who presided at the trial or before whom the guilty plea was entered, or any other judge if the judge who presided at the trial or before whom the guilty plea was entered is unavailable, shall conduct a separate sentencing hearing to determine the punishment to be imposed. The hearing shall be conducted—

"(A) before the jury which determined the defendant's guilt;

"(B) before a jury impaneled for the purpose of the hearing if—

"(i) the defendant was convicted upon a plea of guilty;

"(ii) the defendant was convicted after a trial before the court sitting without a jury;

"(iii) the jury which determined the defendant's guilt has been discharged for good cause; or

"(iv) after initial imposition of a sentence under this section, redetermination of the sentence under this section is necessary; or

"(C) before the court alone, upon the motion of the defendant and with the approval of the Government.

"(2) A jury impaneled pursuant to paragraph (i)(B) shall consist of 12 members, unless, at any time before the conclusion of the hearing, the parties stipulate with the approval of the court that it shall consist of any number less than 12.

"Proof of Aggravating and Mitigating Factors

"(j) Notwithstanding rule 32(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, when a defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense under subsection (e), no presentence report shall be prepared. In the sentencing hearing, information may be presented as to any matter relevant to the sentence and shall include matters relating to any of the aggravating or mitigating factors set forth in subsections (m) and (n), or any other mitigating factor. Where information is presented relating to any of the aggravating factors set forth in subsection (n), information may be presented relating to any other aggravating factor. Information presented may include the trial transcript and exhibits if the hearing is held before a jury or judge not present during the trial. Any other information relevant to such mitigating or aggravating factors may be presented by either the Government or the defendant, regardless of its admissibility under the rules governing admission of evidence at criminal trials, except that information may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury. The Government and the defendant shall be permitted to rebut any information received at the hearing and shall be given fair opportunity to present argument as to the adequacy of the information to establish the existence of any of the aggravating or mitigating factors and as to appropriateness in that case of imposing a sentence of death. The Government shall open the argument. The defendant shall be permitted to reply. The Government shall then be permitted to reply in rebuttal. The burden of establishing the existence of any aggravating factor is on the Government, and is not satisfied unless established beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden of establishing the existence of any mitigating factor is on the defendant, and is not satisfied unless established by a preponderance of the evidence.

"Return of Findings

"(k) The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider all the information received during the hearing. It shall return special findings identifying any aggravating factors set forth in subsection (n), found to exist. If one of the aggravating factors set forth in subsection (n)(1) and another of the aggravating factors set forth in paragraphs (2) through (12) of subsection (n) is found to exist, a special finding identifying any other aggravating factor may be returned. A finding with respect to a mitigating factor may be made by one or more of the members of the jury, and any member of the jury who finds the existence of a mitigating factor may consider such a factor established for purposes of this subsection, regardless of the number of jurors who concur that the factor has been established. A finding with respect to any aggravating factor must be unanimous. If an aggravating factor set forth in subsection (n)(1) is not found to exist or an aggravating factor set forth in subsection (n)(1) is found to exist but no other aggravating factor set forth in subsection (n) is found to exist, the court shall impose a sentence, other than death, authorized by law. If an aggravating factor set forth in subsection (n)(1) and one or more of the other aggravating factors set forth in subsection (n) are found to exist, the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall then consider whether the aggravating factor or factors found to exist sufficiently outweigh any mitigating factor or factors found to exist, or in the absence of mitigating factors, whether the aggravating factors are themselves sufficient to justify a sentence of death. Based upon this consideration, the jury by unanimous vote, or if there is no jury, the court, shall return a finding as to whether a sentence of death is justified.

"Imposition of Sentence

"(l) Upon a finding that a sentence of death is justified, the court shall sentence the defendant to death. Otherwise the court shall impose a sentence, other than death, authorized by law. A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a person who is under 18 years of age at the time the crime was committed. A sentence of death shall not be carried out upon a person who, by reason of a mental disease or defect, is unable to understand his impending death or the reasons for it.

"Mitigating Factors

"(m) In determining whether a sentence of death is to be imposed on a defendant, the following mitigating factors shall be considered but are not exclusive:

"(1) The defendant's capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law was significantly impaired, but not so impaired as to constitute a defense to the charge.

"(2) The defendant was under unusual and substantial duress, although not such duress as constitutes a defense to the charge.

"(3) The defendant is punishable as a principal (as defined in section 2(a) of title 18 of the United States Code) in the offense, which was committed by another, but the defendant's participation was relatively minor, although not so minor as to constitute a defense to the charge.

"(4) The defendant could not reasonably have foreseen that his conduct in the course of the commission of murder, or other offense resulting in death for which the defendant was convicted, would cause, or would create a grave risk of causing, death to any person.

"Aggravating Factors for Homicide

"(n) If the defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense under subsection (e), the following aggravating factors shall be considered but are not exclusive:

"(1) The defendant—

"(A) intentionally killed the victim;

"(B) intentionally inflicted serious bodily injury which resulted in the death of the victim;

"(C) intentionally engaged in conduct intending that the victim be killed or that lethal force be employed against the victim, which resulted in the death of the victim.

"(D) intentionally engaged in conduct which—

"(i) the defendant knew would create a grave risk of death to a person, other than one of the participants in the offense; and

"(ii) resulted in the death of the victim.

"(2) The defendant has been convicted of another Federal offense, or a State offense resulting in the death of a person, for which a sentence of life imprisonment or a sentence of death was authorized by statute.

"(3) The defendant has previously been convicted of two or more State or Federal offenses punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the infliction of, or attempted infliction of, serious bodily injury upon another person.

"(4) The defendant has previously been convicted of two or more State or Federal offenses punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the distribution of a controlled substance.

"(5) In the commission of the offense or in escaping apprehension for a violation of subsection (e), the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of death to one or more persons in addition to the victims of the offense.

"(6) PROCUREMENT OF THE OFFENSE BY PAYMENT.—The defendant procured the commission of the offense by payment, or promise of payment, of anything of pecuniary value.

"(7) COMMISSION OF THE OFFENSE FOR PAYMENT.—The defendant committed the offense as consideration for the receipt, or in the expectation of the receipt, of anything of pecuniary value.

"(8) SUBSTANTIAL PLANNING AND PREMEDITATION.—The defendant committed the offense after substantial planning and premeditation.

"(9) VULNERABILITY OF VICTIM.—The victim was particularly vulnerable due to old age, youth, or infirmity.

"(10) The defendant had previously been convicted of violating a provision of the Controlled Substances Act for which a sentence of five or more years may be imposed or was engaged in a continuing criminal enterprise.

"(11) The violation of this chapter in relation to which the conduct described in subsection (e) occurred was a violation of section 405.

"(12) The defendant committed the offense in an especially heinous, cruel, or depraved manner in that it involved torture or serious physical abuse to the victim.

"Right of the Defendant to Justice Without Discrimination

"(o)(1) In any hearing held before a jury under this section, the court shall instruct the jury that in its consideration of whether the sentence of death is justified it shall not consider the race, color, national origin, or sex of the defendant or the victim, and that the jury is not to recommend a sentence of death unless it has concluded that it would recommend a sentence of death for the crime in question no matter what race the defendant, or the victim, may be. The jury shall return to the court a certificate signed by each juror that consideration of race, color, national origin, creed, or sex of the defendant or the victim was not involved in reaching his or her individual decision, and that the individual juror would have made the same recommendation regarding a sentence for the crime in question no matter what race the defendant, or the victim, may be.

"(2) Not later than one year from the date of enactment of this section, the Comptroller General shall conduct a study of the various procedures used by the several States for determining whether or not to impose the death penalty in particular cases, and shall report to the Congress on whether or not any or all of the various procedures create a significant risk that the race of a defendant, or the race of a victim against whom a crime was committed, influence the likelihood that defendants in those States will be sentenced to death. In conducting the study required by this paragraph, the General Accounting Office shall—

"(A) use ordinary methods of statistical analysis, including methods comparable to those ruled admissible by the courts in race discrimination cases under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964;

"(B) study only crimes occurring after January 1, 1976; and

"(C) determine what, if any, other factors, including any relation between any aggravating or mitigating factors and the race of the victim or the defendant, may account for any evidence that the race of the defendant, or the race of the victim, influences the likelihood that defendants will be sentenced to death. In addition, the General Accounting Office shall examine separately and include in the report, death penalty cases involving crimes similar to those covered under this section.

"Sentencing in Capital Cases in Which Death Penalty is not Sought or Imposed

"(p) If a person is convicted for an offense under subsection (e) and the court does not impose the penalty of death, the court may impose a sentence of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole.

"Appeal in Capital Cases

"(q)(1) In any case in which the sentence of death is imposed under this section, the sentence of death shall be subject to review by the court of appeals upon appeal by the defendant. Notice of appeal must be filed within the time prescribed for appeal of judgment in section 2107 of title 28 of the United States Code. An appeal under this section may be consolidated with an appeal of the judgment of conviction. Such review shall have priority over all other cases.

"(2) On review of the sentence, the court of appeals shall consider the record, the evidence submitted during the trial, the information submitted during the sentencing hearing, the procedures employed in the sentencing hearing, and the special findings returned under this section.

"(3) The court shall affirm the sentence if it determines that—

"(A) the sentence of death was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor; and

"(B) the information supports the special finding of the existence of every aggravating factor upon which the sentence was based, together with or the failure to find any mitigating factors as set forth or allowed in this section.

In all other cases the court shall remand the case for reconsideration under this section. The court of appeals shall state in writing the reasons for its disposition of the review of the sentence.

"(4) In any post-conviction proceeding under section 2254 or 2255 of title 28, United States Code seeking to vacate or set aside a death sentence, the court shall appoint counsel to represent any defendant who is or becomes financially unable to obtain adequate representation.

"Refusal to Participate by State and Federal Correctional Employees

"(r) No employee of any State department of corrections or the Federal Bureau of Prisons and no employee providing services to that department or bureau under contract shall be required, as a condition of that employment, or contractual obligation to be in attendance at or to participate in any execution carried out under this section if such participation is contrary to the moral or religious convictions of the employee. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'participation in executions' includes personal preparation of the condemned individual and the apparatus used for execution and supervision of the activities of other personnel in carrying out such activities.".

"(2) As used in paragraph (1)(b), a 'law enforcement officer' is a public servant authorized by law or by a Government agency or Congress to conduct or engage in the prevention, investigation, prosecution or adjudication of an offense, and includes those engaged in corrections, probation, or parole functions.".

"(ii) information to show that the withdrawal period at which residues of the new animal drug will be consistent with the tolerances established for the approved new animal drug is the same as the withdrawal period previously established for the approved new animal drug or, if the withdrawal period is proposed to be different, information showing that the residues of the new animal drug at the proposed different withdrawal period will be consistent with the tolerances established for the approved new animal drug;

"(B)(i) information to show that the active ingredients of the new animal drug are the same as those of the approved new animal drug, and

"(ii) if the approved new animal drug has more than one active ingredient, and if one of the active ingredients of the new animal drug is different from one of the active ingredients of the approved new animal drug and the application is filed pursuant to the approval of a petition filed under paragraph (3)—

"(I) information to show that the other active ingredients of the new animal drug are the same as the active ingredients of the approved new animal drug,

"(II) information to show either that the different active ingredient is an active ingredient of another approved new animal drug or of an animal drug which does not meet the requirements of section 201(w), and

"(III) such other information respecting the different active ingredients as the Secretary may require;

"(C)(i) if the approved new animal drug is permitted to be used with one or more animal drugs in animal feed, information to show that the proposed uses of the new animal drug with other animal drugs in animal feed are the same as the uses of the approved new animal drug, and

"(ii) if the approved new animal drug is permitted to be used with one or more other animal drugs in animal feed, and one of the other animal drugs proposed for use with the new animal drug in animal feed is different from one of the other animal drugs permitted to be used in animal feed with the approved new animal drug, and the application is filed pursuant to the approval of a petition filed under paragraph (3)—

"(I) information to show either that the different animal drug proposed for use with the approved new animal drug in animal feed is an approved new animal drug permitted to be used in animal feed or does not meet the requirements of section 201(w) when used with another animal drug in animal feed,

"(II) information to show that other animal drugs proposed for use with the new animal drug in animal feed are the same as the other animal drugs permitted to be used with the approved new animal drug, and

"(III) such other information respecting the different animal drug or combination with respect to which the petition was filed as the Secretary may require,

"(D) information to show that the route of administration, the dosage form, and the strength of the new animal drug are the same as those of the approved new animal drug or, if the route of administration, the dosage form, or the strength of the new animal drug is different and the application is filed pursuant to the approval of a petition filed under paragraph (3), such information respecting the route of administration, dosage form, or strength with respect to which the petition was filed as the Secretary may require;

"(E) information to show that the new animal drug is bioequivalent to the approved new animal drug, except that if the application is filed pursuant to the approval of a petition filed under paragraph (3) for the purposes described in subparagraph (B) or (C), information to show that the active ingredients of the new animal drug are of the same pharmacological or therapeutic class as the pharmacological or therapeutic class of the approved new animal drug and that the new animal drug can be expected to have the same therapeutic effect as the approved new animal drug when used in accordance with the labeling;

"(F) information to show that the labeling proposed for the new animal drug is the same as the labeling approved for the approved new animal drug except for changes required because of differences approved under a petition filed under paragraph (3), because of a different withdrawal period, or because the new animal drug and the approved new animal drug are produced or distributed by different manufacturers;

"(G) the items specified in clauses (B) through (F) of subsection (b)(1);

"(H) a certification, in the opinion of the applicant and to the best of his knowledge, with respect to each patent which claims the approved new animal drug or which claims a use for such approved new animal drug for which the applicant is seeking approval under this subsection and for which information is required to be filed under subsection (b)(1) or (c)(3)—

"(i) that such patent information has not been filed,

"(ii) that such patent has expired,

"(iii) of the date on which such patent will expire, or

"(iv) that such patent is invalid or will not be infringed by the manufacture, use, or sale of the new animal drug for which the application is filed; and

"(I) if with respect to the approved new animal drug information was filed under subsection (b)(1) or (c)(3) for a method of use patent which does not claim a use for which the applicant is seeking approval of an application under subsection (c)(2), a statement that the method of use patent does not claim such a use.

The Secretary may not require that an abbreviated application contain information in addition to that required by subparagraphs (A) through (H).

"(2)(A) An applicant who makes a certification described in paragraph (1)(G)(iv) shall include in the application a statement that the applicant will give the notice required by subparagraph (B) to—

"(i) each owner of the patent which is the subject of the certification or the representative of such owner designated to receive such notice, and

"(ii) the holder of the approved application under subsection (c)(1) for the drug which is claimed by the patent or a use of which is claimed by the patent or the representative of such holder designated to receive such notice.

"(B) The notice referred to in subparagraph (A) shall state that an application, which contains data from bioequivalence studies, has been filed under this subsection for the drug with respect to which the certification is made to obtain approval to engage in the commercial manufacture, use, or sale of such drug before the expiration of the patent referred to in the certification. Such notice shall include a detailed statement of the factual and legal basis of the applicant's opinion that the patent is not valid or will not be infringed.

"(C) If an application is amended to include a certification described in paragraph (1)(G)(iv), the notice required by subparagraph (B) shall be given when the amended application is filed.

"(3) If a person wants to submit an abbreviated application for a new animal drug—

"(A) whose active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, or strength differ from that of an approved new animal drug, or

"(B) whose use with other animal drugs in animal feed differs from that of an approved new animal drug, such person shall submit a petition to the Secretary seeking permission to file such an application. The Secretary shall approve a petition for a new animal drug unless the Secretary finds that—

"(A) investigations must be conducted to show the safety and effectiveness, in animals to be treated with the drug, of the active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed which differ from the approved new animal drug, or

"(B) investigations must be conducted to show the safety for human consumption of any residues in food resulting from the proposed active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed for the new animal drug which is different from the active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed of the approved new animal drug.

The Secretary shall approve or disapprove a petition submitted under this paragraph within 90 days of the date the petition is submitted.

"(4)(A)(i) Within 60 days of the date of the enactment of this subsection, the Secretary shall publish and make available to the public a list in alphabetical order of the official and proprietary name of each new animal drug which has been approved for safety and effectiveness before the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(ii) Every 30 days after the publication of the first list under clause (i) the Secretary shall revise the list to include each new animal drug which has been approved for safety and effectiveness under subsection (c) during the 30 day period.

"(iii) When patent information submitted under subsection (b)(1) or (c)(3) respecting a new animal drug included on the list is to be published by the Secretary, the Secretary shall, in revisions made under clause (ii), include such information for such drug.

"(B) A new animal drug approved for safety and effectiveness before the date of the enactment of this subsection or approved for safety and effectiveness under subsection (c) shall, for purposes of this subsection, be considered to have been published under subparagraph (A) on the date of its approval or the date of enactment, whichever is later.

"(C) If the approval of a new animal drug was withdrawn or suspended under subsection (c)(2)(G) or for grounds described in subsection (e) or if the Secretary determines that a drug has been withdrawn from sale for safety or effectiveness reasons, it may not be published in the list under subparagraph (A) or, if the withdrawal or suspension occurred after its publication in such list, it shall be immediately removed from such list—

"(i) for the same period as the withdrawal or suspension under subsection (c)(2)(G) or (e), or

"(ii) if the listed drug has been withdrawn from sale, for the period of withdrawal from sale or, if earlier, the period ending on the date the Secretary determines that the withdrawal from sale is not for safety or effectiveness reasons.

A notice of the removal shall be published in the Federal Register.

"(5) If an application contains the information required by clauses (A), (G), and (H) of subsection (b)(1) and such information—

"(A) is relied on by the applicant for the approval of the application, and

"(B) is not information derived either from investigations, studies, or tests conducted by or for the applicant or for which the applicant had obtained a right of reference or use from the person by or for whom the investigations, studies, or tests were conducted, such application shall be considered to be an application filed under subsection (b)(2).

"(o) For purposes of this section, the term 'patent' means a patent issued by the Patent and Trademark Office of the Department of Commerce.".

(c) APPLICATION APPROVAL.—Section 512(c) is amended (1) by inserting "(1)" after "(c)", by redesignating clauses (1) and (2) as clauses (A) and (B), and by adding at the end the following:

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (C), the Secretary shall approve an abbreviated application for a drug unless the Secretary finds—

"(i) the methods used in, or the facilities and controls used for, the manufacture, processing, and packing of the drug are inadequate to assure and preserve its identity, strength, quality, and purity;

"(ii) the conditions of use prescribed, recommended, or suggested in the proposed labeling are not reasonably certain to be followed in practice or, except as provided subparagraph (B), information submitted with the application is insufficient to show that each of the proposed conditions of use or similar limitations (whether in the labeling or published pursuant to subsection (i)) have been previously approved for the approved new animal drug referred to in the application;

"(iii) information submitted with the application is insufficient to show that the active ingredients are the same as those of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application;

"(iv)(I) if the application is for a drug whose active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed is the same as the active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application, information submitted in the application is insufficient to show that the active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed is the same as that of the approved new animal drug, or

"(II) if the application is for a drug whose active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed is different from that of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application, no petition to file an application for the drug with the different active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed was approved under subsection (n)(3);

"(v) if the application was filed pursuant to the approval of a petition under subsection (n)(3), the application did not contain the information required by the Secretary respecting the active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed which is not the same;

"(vi) information submitted in the application is insufficient to show that the drug is bioequivalent to the approved new animal drug referred to in the application, or if the application is filed under a petition approved pursuant to subsection (n)(3), information submitted in the application is insufficient to show that the active ingredients of the new animal drug are of the same pharmacological or therapeutic class as the pharmacological or therapeutic class of the approved new animal drug and that the new animal drug can be expected to have the same therapeutic effect as the approved new animal drug when used in accordance with the labeling;

"(vii) information submitted in the application is insufficient to show that the labeling proposed for the drug is the same as the labeling approved for the approved new animal drug referred to in the application except for changes required because of differences approved under a petition filed under subsection (n)(3), because of a different withdrawal period, or because the drug and the approved new animal drug are produced or distributed by different manufacturers;

"(viii) information submitted in the application or any other information available to the Secretary shows that (I) the inactive ingredients of the drug are unsafe for use under the conditions prescribed, recommended, or suggested in the labeling proposed for the drug, (II) the composition of the drug is unsafe under such conditions because of the type or quantity of inactive ingredients included or the manner in which the inactive ingredients are included, or (III) in the case of a drug for food producing animals, the inactive ingredients of the drug or its composition may be unsafe with respect to human food safety;

"(ix) the approval under subsection (b)(1) of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application filed under subsection (b)(2) has been withdrawn or suspended for grounds described in paragraph (1) of subsection (e), the Secretary has published a notice of a hearing to withdraw approval of the approved new animal drug for such grounds, the approval under this paragraph of the new animal drug for which the application under subsection (b)(2) was filed has been withdrawn or suspended under subparagraph (G) for such grounds, or the Secretary has determined that the approved new animal drug has been withdrawn from sale for safety or effectiveness reasons;

"(x) the application does not meet any other requirement of subsection (n); or

"(xi) the application contains an untrue statement of material fact.

"(B) If the Secretary finds that a new animal drug for which an application is submitted under subsection (b)(2) is bioequivalent to the approved new animal drug referred to in such application and that residues of the new animal drug are consistent with the tolerances established for such approved new animal drug but at a withdrawal period which is different than the withdrawal period approved for such approved new animal drug, the Secretary may establish, on the basis of information submitted, such different withdrawal period as the withdrawal period for the new animal drug for purposes of the approval of such application for such drug.

"(C) Within 180 days of the initial receipt of an application under subsection (b)(2) or within such additional period as may be agreed upon by the Secretary and the applicant, the Secretary shall approve or disapprove the application.

"(D) The approval of an application filed under subsection (b)(2) shall be made effective on the last applicable date determined under the following:

"(i) If the applicant only made a certification described in clause (i) or (ii) of subsection (n)(1)(G) or in both such clauses, the approval may be made effective immediately.

"(ii) If the applicant made a certification described in clause (iii) of subsection (n)(1)(G), the approval may be made effective on the date certified under clause (iii).

"(iii) If the applicant made a certification described in clause (iv) of subsection (n)(1)(G), the approval shall be made effective immediately unless an action is brought for infringement of a patent which is the subject of the certification before the expiration of 45 days from the date the notice provided under subsection (n)(2)(B)(i) is received. If such an action is brought before the expiration of such days, the approval shall be made effective upon the expiration of the 30 month period beginning on the date of the receipt of the notice provided under subsection (n)(2)(B) or such shorter or longer period as the court may order because either party to the action failed to reasonably cooperate in expediting the action, except that if before the expiration of such period—

"(I) the court decides that such patent is invalid or not infringed, the approval shall be made effective on the date of the court decision,

"(II) the court decides that such patent has been infringed, the approval shall be made effective on such date as the court orders under section 271(e)(4)(A) of title 35, United States Code, or

"(III) the court grants a preliminary injunction prohibiting the applicant from engaging in the commercial manufacture or sale of the drug until the court decides the issues of patent validity and infringement and if the court decides that such patent is invalid or not infringed, the approval shall be made effective on the date of such court decision.

In such an action, each of the parties shall reasonably cooperate in expediting the action. Until the expiration of 45 days from the date the notice made under subsection (n)(2)(B) is received, no action may be brought under section 2201 of title 28, United States Code, for a declaratory judgment with respect to the patent. Any action brought under section 2201 shall be brought in the judicial district where the defendant has its principal place of business or a regular and established place of business.

"(iv) If the application contains a certification described in clause (iv) of subsection (n)(1)(G) and is for a drug for which a previous application has been filed under this subsection containing such a certification, the application shall be made effective not earlier than 180 days after—

"(I) the date the Secretary receives notice from the applicant under the previous application of the first commercial marketing of the drug under the previous application, or

"(II) the date of a decision of a court in an action described in subclause (III) holding the patent which is the subject of the certification to be invalid or not infringed, whichever is earlier.

"(E) If the Secretary decides to disapprove an application, the Secretary shall give the applicant notice of an opportunity for a hearing before the Secretary on the question of whether such application is approvable. If the applicant elects to accept the opportunity for hearing by written request within 30 days after such notice, such hearing shall commence not more than 90 days after the expiration of such 30 days unless the Secretary and the applicant otherwise agree. Any such hearing shall thereafter be conducted on an expedited basis and the Secretary's order thereon shall be issued within 90 days after the date fixed by the Secretary for filing final briefs.

"(F)(i) If an application submitted under subsection (b)(1) for a drug, no active ingredient (including any ester or salt of the active ingredient) of which has been approved in any other application under subsection (b)(1), is approved after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, no application may be submitted under subsection (b)(2) which refers to the drug for which the subsection (b)(1) application was submitted before the expiration of 5 years from the date of the approval of the application under subsection (b)(1), except that such an application may be submitted under subsection (b)(2) after the expiration of 4 years from the date of the approval of the subsection (b)(1) application if it contains a certification of patent invalidity or noninfringement described in clause (iv) of subsection (n)(1)(G). The approval of such an application shall be made effective in accordance with subparagraph (B) except that, if an action for patent infringement is commenced during the one-year period beginning forty-eight months after the date of the approval of the subsection (b) application, the 30 month period referred to in subparagraph (C)(iii) shall be extended by such amount of time (if any) which is required for seven and one-half years to have elapsed from the date of approval of the subsection (b) application.

"(ii) If an application submitted under subsection (b)(1) for a drug, which includes an active ingredient (including any ester or salt of the active ingredient) that has been approved in another application approved under such subsection, is approved after the date of enactment of this paragraph and if such application contains reports of new clinical or field investigations (other than bioequivalence or residue studies) and, in the case of food producing animals, human food safety studies (other than bioequivalence or residue studies) essential to the approval of the application and conducted or sponsored by the applicant, the Secretary may not make the approval of an application submitted under subsection (b)(2) for the conditions of approval of such drug in the subsection (b)(1) application effective before the expiration of 3 years from the date of the approval of the application under subsection (b)(1) for such drug.

"(iii) If a supplement to an application approved under subsection (b)(1) is approved after the date of enactment of this paragraph and the supplement contains reports of new clinical or field investigations (other than bioequivalence or residue studies) and, in the case of food producing animals, human food safety studies (other than bioequivalence or residue studies) essential to the approval of the supplement and conducted or sponsored by the person submitting the supplement, the Secretary may not make the approval of an application submitted under subsection (b)(2) for a change approved in the supplement effective before the expiration of 3 years from the date of the approval of the supplement.

"(iv) An applicant under subsection (b)(1) who comes within the provisions of clause (i) of this subparagraph as a result of an application which seeks approval for a use solely in non-food producing animals, may elect, within 10 days of receiving such approval, to waive clause (i) of this subparagraph, in which event the limitation on approval of applications submitted under subsection (b)(2) set forth in clause (ii) of this subparagraph shall be applicable to the subsection (b)(1) application.

"(v) If an application (including any supplement to a new animal drug application) submitted under subsection (b)(1) for a new animal drug for a food-producing animal use, which includes an active ingredient (including any ester or salt of the active ingredient) which has been the subject of a waiver under subparagraph (B)(iv) is approved after the date of enactment of this paragraph, and if the application contains reports of clinical or field investigations or human food safety studies (other than bioequivalence or residue studies) essential to the new approval of the application and conducted or sponsored by the applicant, the Secretary may not make the approval of an application (including any supplement to such application) submitted under subsection (b)(2) for the new conditions of approval of such drug in the subsection (b)(1) application effective before the expiration of five years from the date of approval of the application under subsection (b)(1) for such drug. The provisions of this paragraph shall apply only to the first approval for a food-producing animal use for the same applicant after the waiver under subparagraph (B)(iv).

"(G) If an approved application submitted under subsection (b)(2) for a new animal drug refers to a drug the approval of which was withdrawn or suspended for grounds described in paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (e) or was withdrawn or suspended under this subparagraph or which, as determined by the Secretary, has been withdrawn from sale for safety or effectiveness reasons, the approval of the drug under this paragraph shall be withdrawn or suspended—

"(i) for the same period as the withdrawal or suspension under subsection (e) or this subparagraph, or

"(ii) if the approved new animal drug has been withdrawn from sale, for the period of withdrawal from sale or, if earlier, the period ending on the date the Secretary determines that the withdrawal from sale is not for safety or effectiveness reasons.

"(H) For purposes of this paragraph:

"(i) The term 'bioequivalence' means the rate and extent to which the active ingredient or therapeutic ingredient is absorbed from a new animal drug and becomes available at the site of drug action.

"(ii) A new animal drug shall be considered to be bioequivalent to the approved new animal drug referred to in its application under subsection (n) if—

"(I) the rate and extent of absorption of the drug do not show a significant difference from the rate and extent of absorption of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application when administered at the same dose of the active ingredient under similar experimental conditions in either a single dose or multiple doses;

"(II) the extent of absorption of the drug does not show a significant difference from the extent of absorption of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application when administered at the same dose of the active ingredient under similar experimental conditions in either a single dose or multiple doses and the difference from the approved new animal drug in the rate of absorption of the drug is intentional, is reflected in its proposed labeling, is not essential to the attainment of effective drug concentrations in use, and is considered scientifically insignificant for the drug in attaining the intended purposes of its use and preserving human food safety; or

"(III) in any case in which the Secretary determines that the measurement of the rate and extent of absorption or excretion of the new animal drug in biological fluids is inappropriate or impractical, an appropriate acute pharmacological effects test or other test of the new animal drug and, when deemed scientifically necessary, of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application in the species to be tested or in an appropriate animal model does not show a significant difference between the new animal drug and such approved new animal drug when administered at the same dose under similar experimental conditions.

If the approved new animal drug referred to in the application for a new animal drug under subsection (n) is approved for use in more than one animal species, the bioequivalency information described in subclause (I), (II), and (III) shall be obtained for one species, or if the Secretary deems appropriate based on scientific principles, shall be obtained for more than one species. The Secretary may prescribe the dose to be used in determining bioequivalency under subclause (I), (II), or (III). To assure that the residues of the new animal drug will be consistent with the established tolerances for the approved new animal drug referred to in the application under subsection (b)(2) upon the expiration of the withdrawal period contained in the application for the new animal drug, the Secretary shall require bioequivalency data or residue depletion studies of the new animal drug or such other data or studies as the Secretary considers appropriate based on scientific principles. If the Secretary requires one or more residue studies under the preceding sentence, the Secretary may not require that the assay methodology used to determine the withdrawal period of the new animal drug be more rigorous than the methodology used to determine the withdrawal period for the approved new animal drug referred to in the application. If such studies are required and if the approved new animal drug, referred to in the application for the new animal drug for which such studies are required, is approved for use in more than one animal species, such studies shall be conducted for one species, or if the Secretary deems appropriate based on scientific principles, shall be conducted for more than one species.".

SEC. 602. PATENT INFORMATION.

(a) SECTION 512(b).— Section 512(b)(1) of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following: "The applicant shall file with the application the patent number and the expiration date of any patent which claims the new animal drug for which the applicant filed the application or which claims a method of using such drug and with respect to which a claim of patent infringement could reasonably be asserted if a person not licensed by the owner engaged in the manufacture, use, or sale of the drug. If an application is filed under this subsection for a drug and a patent which claims such drug or a method of using such drug is issued after the filing date but before approval of the application, the applicant shall amend the application to include the information required by the preceding sentence. Upon approval of the application, the Secretary shall publish information submitted under the two preceding sentences.".

(b) OTHER SECTIONS.—

(1) Section 512(c) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(3) If the patent information described in subsection (b)(1) could not be filed with the submission of an application under subsection (b)(1) because the application was filed before the patent information was required under subsection (b)(1) or a patent was issued after the application was approved under such subsection, the holder of an approved application shall file with the Secretary the patent number and the expiration date of any patent which claims the new animal drug for which the application was filed or which claims a method of using such drug and with respect to which a claim of patent infringement could reasonably be asserted if a person not licensed by the owner engaged in the manufacture, use, or sale of the drug. If the holder of an approved application could not file patent information under subsection (b)(1) because it was not required at the time the application was approved, the holder shall file such information under this subsection not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this sentence, and if the holder of an approved application could not file patent information under subsection (b)(1) because no patent had been issued when an application was filed or approved, the holder shall file such information under this subsection not later than 30 days after the date the patent involved is issued. Upon the submission of patent information under this subsection, the Secretary shall publish it.".

(2) The first sentence of section 512(d)(1) is amended by redesignating subparagraphs (G) and (H) as subparagraphs (H) and (I), respectively and by inserting after subparagraph (F) the following:

"(G) the application failed to contain the patent information prescribed by subsection (b)(1);".

(3) The second sentence of section 512(d)(1) is amended by striking out "(H)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(G)".

(4) The first sentence of section 512(e)(1) is amended by redesignating subparagraphs (D) and (E) as subparagraphs (E) and (F), respectively, and by inserting after subparagraph (C) the following:

"(D) the patent information prescribed by subsection (c)(3) was not filed within 30 days after the receipt of written notice from the Secretary specifying the failure to file such information;".

SEC. 603. REGULATIONS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall promulgate, in accordance with the notice and comment requirements of section 553 of title 5, United States Code, such regulations as may be necessary for the administration of section 512 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by sections 601 through 603 of this title, within one year of the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) TRANSITION.—During the period beginning 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act and ending on the date regulations promulgated under subsection (a) take effect, abbreviated new animal drug applications may be submitted in accordance with the provisions of section 314.55 and part 320 of title 21 of the Code of Federal Regulations and shall be considered as suitable for any drug which has been approved for safety and effectiveness under section 512(c) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act before the date of enactment of this Act. If any such provision of section 314.55 or part 320 is inconsistent with the requirements of section 512 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (as amended by this title), the Secretary shall consider the application under the applicable requirements of section 512 (as so amended).

SEC. 604. SAFETY AND EFFECTIVENESS DATA.

Section 512 (as amended by section 601(b) of this title) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(p)(1) Safety and effectiveness data and information which has been submitted in an application filed under subsection (b)(1) for a drug and which has not previously been disclosed to the public shall be made available to the public, upon request, unless extraordinary circumstances are shown—

"(A) if no work is being or will be undertaken to have the application approved,

"(B) if the Secretary has determined that the application is not approvable and all legal appeals have been exhausted,

"(C) if approval of the application under subsection (c) is withdrawn and all legal appeals have been exhausted,

"(D) if the Secretary has determined that such drug is not a new drug, or

"(E) upon the effective date of the approval of the first application filed under subsection (b)(2) which refers to such drug or upon the date upon which the approval of an application filed under subsection (b)(2) which refers to such drug could be made effective if such an application had been filed.

"(2) Any request for data and information pursuant to paragraph (1) shall include a verified statement by the person making the request that any data or information received under such paragraph shall not be disclosed by such person to any other person—

"(A) for the purpose of, or as part of a plan, scheme, or device for, obtaining the right to make, use, or market, or making, using, or marketing, outside the United States, the drug identified in the application filed under subsection (b)(1), and

"(B) without obtaining from any person to whom the data and information are disclosed an identical verified statement, a copy of which is to be provided by such person to the Secretary, which meets the requirements of this paragraph.".

SEC. 605. VETERINARY PRESCRIPTION DRUGS.

Section 503 (21 U.S.C. 353) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c)(1)(A) A drug intended for use by animals other than man which—

"(i) because of its toxicity or other potentiality for harmful effect, or the method of its use, or the collateral measures necessary for its use, is not safe for animal use except under the professional supervision of a licensed veterinarian, or

"(ii) is limited by an approved application under subsection (b) of section 512 to use under the professional supervision of a licensed veterinarian, shall be dispensed only by or upon the lawful written or oral order of a licensed veterinarian in the course of the veterinarian's professional practice.

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), an order is lawful if the order—

"(i) is a prescription or other order authorized by law,

"(ii) is, if an oral order, promptly reduced to writing by the person lawfully filling the order, and filed by that person, and

"(iii) is refilled only if authorized in the original order or in a subsequent oral order promptly reduced to writing by the person lawfully filling the order, and filed by that person.

"(C) The act of dispensing a drug contrary to the provisions of this paragraph shall be deemed to be an act which results in the drug being misbranded while held for sale.

"(2) Any drug when dispensed in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection—

"(A) shall be exempt from the requirements of section 502, except subsections (a), (g), (h), (i)(2), (i)(3), and (p) of such section, and

(b) EXCEPTIONS.—Benefits may not be paid under this section with respect to a disease described in subsection (a)(1)(B) occurring in a veteran—

(1) where there is affirmative evidence that such disease was not incurred by the veteran during service in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era; or

(2) where there is affirmative evidence to establish that an intercurrent injury or disease which is a recognized cause of such disease was suffered by the veteran between the date of the veteran's most recent departure from the Republic of Vietnam during active military, naval, or air service and the onset of the disease described in subsection (a)(1)(B).

(c) BENEFIT AMOUNTS.—(1) A disability benefit payable to a veteran under this section for a disability resulting from a disease described in subsection (a)(1)(B) shall be paid at the rate at which compensation would be payable under chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, to that veteran for the disability resulting from that disease if the disability were determined to be service connected.

(5) Such land shall be offered by the Secretary for sale to the City, subject to a right of reverter in favor of the United States restricting the use of such land perpetually to provide for public open space and recreation, at a price determined by the Secretary which shall be representative of the value of such land discounted to account for such restrictions in use. In the event that the City does not accept the offer of the United States to purchase such land within six months from the date such offer is made, such land shall be offered for sale to the Purchaser at fair market value. (G) meet any other requirements prescribed by the Secretary in the notice published under paragraph (2)(A) which are reasonably necessary to ensure that any offer accepted by the United States under this subsection will provide public benefits to the United States comparable to those provided to the United States under the Land Exchange; and

(H) be accompanied by the deposit of a bond or other guarantee consistent with the requirements prescribed by the Secretary under paragraph (2).

(4) The minimum acceptable price for sale of the Phoenix Exchange Property is a cash amount equal to the sum of the amount required to be deposited into the account for purchase of the Florida Lands and reimbursement of costs under subsection (i) and an amount equal to the amount required to be paid by Collier under paragraphs 13 and 14 of the Exchange Agreement.

Prior to the termination, nonrenewal or modification of those Special Use Authorizations for the areas noted above, the Secretary shall, with the assistance of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, conduct a biological study to determine the effects of such special use authorizations upon the Mt. The biological study shall also involve the participation of representatives from the community of Safford, Arizona, all of the affected parties, and any other appropriate interests. In addition to the biological study, the Secretary shall initiate consultation with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service pursuant to Section 7(a)(2) of the Endangered Species Act regarding the termination, nonrenewal, extension or modification of the special use authorizations.

(b) Pursuant to Title 2300 of the Forest Service Manual, special use terminations, nonrenewals, or modifications shall not take effect until ten years from the last date of the tenure of existing special use authorizations described in subsection (a). Unless the biological study or the biological opinion issued by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service after consultation under the Endangered Species Act concluded that an earlier date was necessary to avoid jeopardizing the continued existence of the Mt. Graham red squirrel or any other threatened or endangered species, such actual terminations, nonrenewals, or modifications shall not take effect before completion of a biological study by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to begin in the year 2000. This additional study shall be subject to the same requirements and involve the same participants as described in subsection (a).

(c) If, after completion of these studies, termination, modification or nonrenewal of special use authorizations described in subsection (a) are prescribed, the U.S. Forest Service shall, with the cooperation and approval of the holders of these special use authorizations, develop a relocation plan for such individuals and entities.

(d) Nothing in this Section is intended to preclude the termination of special use authorizations for breach by the permittee of terms and conditions of the authorizations.

OMNIBUS ANTI-SUBSTANCE ABUSE ACT

KENNEDY AMENDMENT NO. 3683

Mr. KENNEDY proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 5210, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new subtitle:

Subtitle B—Racial Justice Act of 1988

SEC. 7101. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Racial Justice Act of 1988".

SEC. 7102. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution calls upon Congress to enforce the Constitution's promise of equality under law;

(2) equality under law is tested most profoundly by whether a legal system tolerates race playing a role in the determination of whether and when to administer the ultimate penalty of death;

(3) the death penalty is being administered in a pattern that evidences a significant risk that the race of the defendant, or the race of the victim against whom the crime was committed, influences the likelihood that the defendant will be sentenced to death;

(4) the Constitution's guarantee of equal justice for all is jeopardized when the death penalty is imposed in a pattern in which the likelihood of a death sentence is affected by the race of the perpetrator or of the victim;

(5) the United States Supreme Court has concluded that the Federal judiciary is institutionally unable to eliminate this jeopardy to equal justice in the absence of proof that a legislature, prosecutor, judge, or jury acted with racially invidious and discriminatory motives in the case of a particular defendant;

(6) the interest in ensuring equal justice under law may be harmed, not only by decisions motivated by explicit racial bias, but also by government rules, policies, and practices that operate to reinforce the subordinate status to which racial minorities were relegated in our society;

(7) the institutional need of courts to identify invidiously motivated perpetrators is not shared by Congress, which is empowered by section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment to take system-wide, preventive measures not only to eliminate adjudicated instances of official race discrimination but also to eradicate wide-scale patterns and practices that entail an intolerable danger that persons of different races would be treated differently; and

(8) the persistent racial problems pervading the implementation of the death penalty in many parts of this Nation require the Government of the United States to counteract the lingering effects of racial oppression and prejudice in order to enforce the constitutional guarantee of equal justice for all Americans.

SEC. 7103. AMENDMENT TO TITLE 28.

(a) Procedure.—Part VI of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 177—RACIALLY DISPROPORTIONATE CAPITAL SENTENCING

"Sec.
"2921. Definitions.
"2922. Prohibition on the imposition or execution of the death penalty in a racially disproportionate pattern.
"2923. Data on death penalty cases.
"2924. Enforcement of the chapter.
"2925. Construction of chapter.

"§ 2921. Definitions

"For purposes of the chapter—

"(1) the term 'a racially disproportionate pattern' means a situation in which sentences of death are imposed more frequently—

"(A) upon convicted persons of one race than upon convicted persons of another race; or

"(B) as punishment for crimes against persons of one race than as punishment for crimes against persons of another race, and the greater frequency is not explained by pertinent nonracial circumstances;

"(2) the term 'death-eligible crime' means a crime for which death is a punishment that is authorized by Federal law to be imposed under any circumstances upon a conviction of that crime;

"(3) the term 'case of death-eligible crime' means a case in which the complaint, indictment, information, or any other initial or subsequent charging paper charges any person with a death-eligible crime; and

"§ 2922. Prohibition on the imposition or execution of the death penalty in a racially disproportionate pattern

"(a) Prohibition.—It is unlawful to impose or execute sentences of death under color of Federal law in a racially disproportionate pattern. No person shall be put to death in the execution of a sentence imposed pursuant to any Federal law if that person's death sentence furthers a racially disproportionate pattern.

"(b) Establishment of a Pattern.—To establish that a racially disproportionate pattern exists for purposes of this chapter—

"(1) ordinary methods of statistical proof shall suffice; and

"(2) it shall not be necessary to show discriminatory motive, intent, or purpose on the part of any individual or institution.

"(c) Prima Facie Showing.—(1) To establish a prima facie showing of a racially disproportionate pattern for purposes of this chapter, it shall suffice that death sentences are being imposed or executed—

"(A) upon persons of one race with a frequency that is disproportioned to their representation among the numbers of persons arrested for, charged with, or convicted of, death-eligible crimes; or

"(B) as punishment for crimes against persons of one race with a frequency that is disproportioned to their representation among the numbers of persons against whom death-eligible crimes have been the subject of arrest, charges, or convictions.

"(2) To rebut a prima facie showing of a racially disproportionate pattern, a Federal entity must establish by clear and convincing evidence that identifiable and pertinent nonracial factors persuasively explain the observable racial disparities comprising the disproportion.

"§ 2923. Data on death penalty cases

"(a) Designation of Agency.—The Federal Government shall designate a central agency to collect and maintain pertinent data on the charging, disposition, and sentencing patterns for all cases of death-eligible crimes.

"(b) Responsibilities of Central Agency.—The central agency designated pursuant to subsection (a) shall—

"(1) affirmatively monitor compliance with this chapter by local officials and agencies;

"(2) devise and distribute to every local official or agency responsible for the investigation or prosecution of death-eligible crimes a standard form to collect pertinent data;

"(3) maintain all standard forms, compile and index all information contained in the forms, and make both the forms and the compiled information publicly available;

"(4) maintain a centralized, alphabetically indexed file of all police and investigative reports transmitted to it by local officials or agencies in every case of death-eligible crime; and

"(5) allow access to its file of police and investigative reports to the counsel of record for any person charged with any death-eligible crime or sentenced to death who has made or intends to make a claim under section 2922 and it may also allow access to this file to other persons.

"(c) Responsibility of Federal Official.—(1) The Federal official responsible for the investigation or prosecution of death-eligible crimes shall—

"(A) complete the standard form developed pursuant to subsection (b)(2) on every case of death-eligible crime; and

"(B) transmit the standard form to the central agency no later than 3 months after the disposition of each such case whether that disposition is by dismissal of charges, reduction of charges, acceptance of a plea of guilty to the death-eligible crime or to another crime, acquittal, conviction, or any decision not to proceed with prosecution.

"(2) In addition to the standard form, the Federal official shall transmit to the central agency one copy of all police and investigative reports made in connection with each case of death-eligible crime.

"(d) Pertinent Data.—The pertinent data required in the standard form shall be designated by the central agency but shall include, at a minimum, the following information:

"(1) pertinent demographic information on all persons charged with the crime and all victims (including race, sex, age, and national origin);

"(2) information on the principal features of the crime;

"(3) information on the aggravating and mitigating factors of the crime, including the background and character of every person charged with the crime; and

"(4) a narrative summary of the crime.

"§ 2924. Enforcement of the Chapter

"(a) Action Under Sections 2241, 2254, or 2255 of This Title.—In any action brought in a court of the United States within the jurisdiction conferred by sections 2241, 2254, or 2255, in which any person raises a claim under section 2922—

"(1) the court shall appoint counsel for any such person who is financially unable to retain counsel; and

"(2) the court shall furnish investigative, expert or other services necessary for the adequate development of the claim to any such person who is financially unable to obtain such services.

"§ 2925. Construction of chapter

"Nothing contained in this chapter shall be construed to affect in one way or the other the lawfulness of any sentence of death that does not violate section 2922.".

(b) Amendment to Table of Chapters.—The table of chapters of part VI of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"177. Racially Disproportionate Capital Sentencing .... 2921.".

SEC. 7104. ACTIONS PRIOR TO THE DATE OF ENACTMENT.

No person shall be barred from raising any claim under section 2292 of title 28, United States Code, as added by this Act, on the ground of having failed to raise or to prosecute the same or a similar claim prior to enactment of the Act, nor by reason of any adjudication rendered prior to its enactment.

SIMON AMENDMENT NO. 3684

Mr. SIMON proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 5210, supra; as follows:

On page 579, line 21, after "individual" insert "who is not engaged in or acting in furtherance of the continuing criminal enterprise".

DOMENICI (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3685

Mr. DOMENICI (for himself, Mr. Gramm, Mr. Dole, Mr. Rudman, Mr. Bingaman, Mr. Helms, Mr. Thurmond, and Mr. Trible) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 5210, supra; as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

SEC. . CIVIL PENALTY FOR POSSESSION OF SMALL AMOUNTS OF CERTAIN CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES.

(a) General.—Any individual who knowingly possesses a controlled substance that is listed in section 401(b)(1)(A) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 841(b)(1)(A)) in violation of section 404 of that Act (21 U.S.C. 841(b)(1)(A)) in an amount that, as specified by regulation of the Attorney General, is a personal use amount shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed $10,000 for each such violation.

(b) Income and Net Assets.—The income and net assets of an individual shall not be relevant to the determination whether to assess a civil penalty under this section or to prosecute the individual criminally. However, in determining the amount of a penalty under this section, the income and net assets of an individual shall be considered.

(c) Prior Conviction.—A civil penalty may not be assessed under this section if the individual previously was convicted of a Federal or State offense relating to a controlled substance as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802).

(d) Limitation on Number of Assessments.—A civil penalty may not be assessed on an individual under this section on more than two separate occasions.

(e) Assessment.—A civil penalty under this section may be assessed by the Attorney General only by an order made on the record after opportunity for a hearing in accordance with section 554 of title 5, United States Code. The Attorney General shall provide written notice to the individual who is the subject of the proposed order informing the individual of the opportunity to receive such a hearing with respect to the proposed order. The hearing may be held only if the individual makes a request for the hearing before the expiration of the 30-day period beginning on the date such notice is issued.

(f) Compromise.—The Attorney General may compromise, modify, or remit, with or without conditions, any civil penalty imposed under this section.

(g) Judicial Review.—If the Attorney General issues an order pursuant to subsection (e) after a hearing described in such subsection, the individual who is subject of the order may, before the expiration of the 30-day period beginning on the date the order is issued, bring a civil action in the appropriate district court of the United States. In such action, the law and the facts of the violation and the assessment of the civil penalty shall be determined de novo, and shall include the right of a trial by jury, the right to counsel, and the right to confront witnesses. The facts of the violation shall be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

(h) Civil Action.—If an individual does not request a hearing pursuant to subsection (e) and the Attorney General issues an order pursuant to such subsection, or if an individual does not under subsection (g) seek judicial review of such an order, the Attorney General may commence a civil action in any appropriate district court of the United States for the purpose of recovering the amount assessed and an amount representing interest at a rate computed in accordance with section 1961 of title 28, United States Code. Such interest shall accrue from the expiration of the 30-day period described in subsection (g). In such an action, the decision of the Attorney General to issue the order, and the amount of the penalty assessed by the Attorney General, shall not be subject to review.

(i) Limitation.—The Attorney General may not under this subsection commence proceeding against an individual after the expiration of the 5-year period beginning on the date on which the individual allegedly violated subsection (a).

(j) Expungement Procedures.—The Attorney General shall dismiss the proceedings under this section against an individual upon application of such individual at any time after the expiration of three years if—

(1) the individual has not previously been assessed a civil penalty under this section;

(2) the individual has paid the assessment.

(3) the individual has complied with any conditions imposed by the Attorney General;

(4) the individual has not been convicted of a Federal or State offense relating to a controlled substance as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802); and

(5) the individual agrees to submit to a drug test and such test shows the individual to be drug-free.

A nonpublic record of a disposition under this subsection shall be retained by the Department of Justice solely for the purpose of determining in any subsequent proceeding whether the person qualified for a civil penalty or expungement under this section. If a record is expunged under this subsection, an individual concerning whom such an expungement has been made shall not be held thereafter under any provision of law to be guilty of perjury, false swearing, or making a false statement by reason of his failure to recite or acknowledge a proceeding under this section or the results thereof in response to an inquiry made by him for any purpose.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I would like to address the recent publication of Amnesty International's Amnesty Report 1988. In this, their latest compilation, Amnesty International has reported 135 countries who they consider to be violating human rights within their borders. These violations range from police brutality, to restriction of speech, to imprisonment and torture without reason.

It is important that we realize what a crucial role an organization such as this plays in the world of politics. Amnesty International has taken an active part in discouraging violations by these countries and in curbing the practice of these illicit and inhumane actions. Only by supporting and applauding organizations such as Amnesty International can we be assured that the spotlight of concern and justice is shining in the shadows of despair.

The report includes sections on two countries of which I am particularly interested, Angola and Chile. I feel that it is extremely important that we, as the leading democratic Nation, act to encourage democratic efforts and reforms occuring in these countries.

At present there is constant suffering and death in Angola. The regime controlling this Nation must be encouraged to negotiate with the democratic opposition to reach a peaceful settlement to the war. In the section on Angola, Amnesty International informs the world of the horrible conditions in this region. The present regime has been known to discourage members involved with the "National Union for the Total Independence of Angola" by imprisoning and torturing dissidents without lawful reason. People are sent to prison camps for everything from holding democratic sentiment to the ridiculous charge of witchcraft. These cases along with many others are clearly human rights infringements.

Furthermore, the situation in Chile continues to demand attention and scrutiny. The plebescite was a great stride in bringing about democracy in Chile, but the country's Government still has a long way to go. Only through constant deliberation and awareness will we be able to help Chile attain a democratic government.

Mr. President, I ask that the following articles on pressing human rights issues be entered into the RECORD as if read. I also encourage my colleagues to read the latest Amnesty International Report.

The articles follow:

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL CITES ABUSES IN 135 NATIONS

LONDON.—Amnesty International today reported that 135 nations committed human rights abuses in the last year, ranging from the jailing of draft evaders in Western Europe to the massacre of unarmed civilians in Iraq and Sudan.

The international rights group said its list of offenders, published in an annual survey that was made public today, was the longest since the group was founded in 1961.

The group, which won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977, said it uncovered abuses in more than 80 percent of the 159 countries that belong to the United Nations. But the group said it was encouraged by the emergence of 1,000 human rights groups around the world in recent years and by the spread of laws to protect the rights of prisoners.

"In at least half the countries of the world, people are locked away for speaking their minds, often after trials that are no more than a sham," the Amnesty International report said.

The report criticized the United States, where 25 convicted criminals were put to death last year, for executing John Brogdon, a man diagnosed as mentally retarded, and Edward Earl Johnson, despite "substantial doubts" about his guilt. Amnesty International opposes the death penalty.

The report said that in China, more than 200 convicted criminals were known to have been put to death, but that the number represented "only a fraction of the total number of death sentences and executions" that were believed to have been carried out.

The report said that 760 political prisoners were reported executed in 39 countries in 1987, but that the number probably was much higher because of secret executions. It said inquires by India, Britain and Israel into abuses were kept secret or whitewashed.

The group said that Turkey, Czechoslovakia and East Germany hid violations, and that China, Haiti, Syria and South Africa clamped down on the reporting of abuses by denying prisoners access to lawyers or families.

"Today, even one death can set off waves of anger and protest worldwide," the group said, citing the death in January 1987 of a South Korean student, Park Chong Chol. The death set off protests that led to the prosecutions of eight police officers and the resignations of Government ministers.

Among the abuses cited were reports that Sudanese forces massacred hundreds of unarmed Dinka tribespeople; that Iraq executed hundreds of unarmed Kurds; the disappearance of hundreds of Peruvian farmers seized by the Government, and court-ordered executions in South African and Iran.

Spain was cited for reportedly torturing Basque separatist prisoners, Britain for failing to publish a police inquiry into the killings of six unarmed Irish Republican Army guerrillas in 1982, and France, Italy, Austria, Greece, Malta, Norway and Switzerland for jailing draft resisters.

In Israel, the report said, a court allowed the secret service to use "a moderate measure of physical pressure" in the questioning of suspects.

EXECUTIONS AND ARRESTS

Iran executed at least 158 people, "although the true number was probably higher," and another 164 people were hanged in South Africa's Pretoria Central Prison, the group said.

Amnesty said "large numbers" of ethnic Turks in Bulgaria remained imprisoned under a campaign of enforced assimilation. In Rumania and East Germany, where prisoners of conscience were released in amnesties, the group said new arrests were reported of people who spoke out.

The Soviet Union released 259 prisoners, most of them prisoners of conscience, the report said. But nearly 200 were pardoned under secret decrees that falsely implied that they were criminals and that "hid the fact that they had been unjustly imprisoned in the first place," the report said.

Another 300 Soviet prisoners of conscience were jailed, exiled or held in psychiatric hospitals, the report said.

A copy of the report can be obtained by sending $10 to Amnesty International U.S.A., 322 Eighth Avenue, New York, N.Y., 10001. Checks should be payable to Amnesty International U.S.A. An additional $1.25 should be included for postage and handling. Copies of the report can be picked up at the group's New York office.

VOTERS AND POLICE PLENTIFUL AS CHILE VOTES

SANTIAGO, CHILE.—Military ruler Augusto Pinochet threatened yesterday to crack down hard on any leftist violence as Chileans headed to the polls.

Thousands of troops and police guarded polling stations. And soldiers in armored cars patrolled some poor districts as Chileans turned out early to place their votes.

The 7.4 million-strong electorate appeared to have heeded government and opposition calls to vote early and then go home to avoid potential violence. Long lines built up outside 1,000 polling stations around the country as they opened at 8 a.m. (7 a.m. Eastern time).

Officials and long lines were slowing the vote and might delay the count. Delays were also reported in opening some polling stations because of technical problems or late arrival of monitors.

Just hours before the plebiscite, saboteurs blew up power lines, briefly blacking out Santiago and a 1,000-mile strip of the country. No group claimed responsibility for the blasts. At present time, no further incidents had been reported.

General Pinochet is the sole candidate in the plebiscite, the first direct leadreship vote since he took power at the hand of a coup in 1973. On the ballot, the choice was between "yes," to extend his rule, and "no," to end it. If he wins the majority, Pinochet gains eight more years in office. If he loses, the Constitution says he must call for a multi-candidate election in December 1989.

Official returns are not expected until Friday.

NEGOTIATORS ON ANGOLA SIT DOWN IN N.Y.

(By E.A. Wayne)

WASHINGTON.—Negotiations from Angola, South Africa, and Cuba will try to build on recent progress when they sit down with US mediators in New York today.

The countries are still trying to reach agreement on a withdrawal schedule for Cuban troops from Angola. This would clear the way for a South African pullout from and independence for Namibia.

There was substantial movement during four days of talks last week, informed sources say. Yet important differences among the parties remain. The key issue is not the length of the withdrawal. Rather, discussions are centered on how much "front loading" should be built into the agreement—specifically how many Cubans should leave early in the withdrawal process and at what intervals.

Parallel to these negotiations, there is movement in an effort by black African leaders to begin a national reconciliation process in Angola, ending the 13-year civil war there. On Saturday, the President of Angola sat down to discuss this issue for the first time with his counterparts from Gabon and the Congo. Previously, Angola has rebuffed efforts to bring about a reconciliation with UNITA anti-government guerrillas, arguing the conflict is an internal matter.

The meetings were reportedly aimed at preparing the way for a summit of African leaders in Zambia, now scheduled for next week. It is not yet clear that the African leaders will be able to develop a real mediation process between the government of Angola and UNITA. The government still publicly opposes any negotiations with its domestic opponents.

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL REPORTS RIGHTS ABUSES HIT RECORD HIGH

(By Julian Baum)

LONDON.—Amnesty International reported this week that more countries were charged with human rights abuses last year than at any time in the organization's 27-year history.

Among the 135 countries in which human rights violations were reported, the London-based organization said that torture or ill-treatment of prisoners was reported in 90 countries and prisoners of conscience—who have committed no violent crimes—were being held in 80 countries.

Capital punishment for various crimes is on the law books in 120 states. The most executions reported last year were in South Africa (164), Iran (158), and China (132). The United States was criticized for executing 25 people in 1987 and having another 1,982 on death row.

Despite what Amnesty described as the "ugly picture" of human rights violations worldwide, it was not cynical about the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted 40 years ago by the United Nations. In its annual report released this week, Amnesty said that while all members of the UN formally subscribed to the declaration, many considered it "subversive."

Amnesty noted that the human rights movement continues to grow. It includes more than 1,000 organizations in every region of the world, and Amnesty is the largest of its kind. In protecting people against human rights abuses by governments, Amnesty said that exposure to international publicity is "the greatest weapon we have."

As an example, Amnesty cited the torture and death last year of a South Korean student, Park Chong Chol. International publicity brought pressure on the South Korean government and led to the arrest of police officers and the resignation of government ministers.

Such cases are exceptional, however. Amnesty noted that many governments find it easy to prevent abuses from coming to light by blocking the flow of information, censoring the press, restricting journalists, and keeping prisoners incommunicado.

Another common technique is launching an investigation that fails to reach a conclusion, or which glosses over facts.

As an example, Amnesty criticized Britain for failing to publish the results of an inquiry into three incidents of killing in 1982 by security forces in Northern Ireland. The investigation—known in Britain as the Stalker report after its principal investigator, John Stalker—continues to be a sensitive issue in Anglo-Irish relations.

In Latin America, Amnesty reported the increased use of clandestine forces by governments to terrorize political opposition, and the operations of "death squads" in Brazil, Colombia, El Salvador, and Guatemala, among others. Torture by state security forces was widely reported in the region, and the report cited a "marked deterioration" of human rights in Haiti.

Despite the release of political prisoners in Afghanistan, Vietnam, South Korea and Taiwan last year, additional prisoners were taken without fair trials.

China was cited for trying to halt the "widespread use of torture" by local security forces. However, Amnesty noted the absence of adequate legal protection for prisoners in China and the extensive use of the death penalty, including for a variety of non-violent crimes.

Some governments in Africa have improved their human rights record, including Togo, Niger, Rwanda, and Zimbabwe.

But torture and ill-treatment of prisoners were reported in 18 countries on the African continent. Some 4,000 alleged prisoners of conscience were being held in Uganda as opponents of the government and large numbers of such prisoners were also jailed in Angola.

In Europe, large numbers of conscientious objectors to military service are in jail, in France, both Germanys, Italy, Poland, Spain, Switzerland, and the Soviet Union.

Torture was reportedly widespread in Turkey where 17 people died in police custody in 1987. Many prisoners of conscience were released in the Soviet Union last year but some 300 prisoners were still in jail, kept in exile, or held in psychiatric hospitals against their will, according to Amnesty.

[From Amnesty International Report, 1988]

ANGOLA

Many people were imprisoned for alleged membership of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA), National Union for the Total Independence of Angola. UNITA, an armed opposition group active in many parts of the country, has received military support from the South African Defence Force. Many of those imprisoned had been arrested in previous years. Most of them were held without charge or trial, although some 10 of these detainees were tried in January along with other political prisoners. At least two people were sentenced to death and the real number of death sentences imposed was believed to be higher. It was not known if there were any executions.

There was continued fighting in many areas between government troops, which had Cuban support, and UNITA and South African military forces. Many people, including civilians, were reported killed in the conflict and both sides accused the other of torturing and killing civilians. It was not possible to verify such allegations or attribute responsibility for individual killings. In September there was a major prisoner exchange in which Captain Wynand du Toit, who had been captured in 1985 in Cabinda, was exchanged for 133 Angolan soldiers held by South Africa.

Many alleged UNITA supporters were taken prisoner during government security force operations against UNITA guerrillas. Others were arrested on suspicion of supporting or assisting UNITA by supplying, for example, food, shelter or information. One of those held was Cláudio Pereira Songamaso, director of legal affairs of the Angolan Red Cross Society. He had been arrested in mid-1986, apparently on suspicion of assisting UNITA, and held incommunicado for several months without charge in the security service detention centre in Luanda. He remained at the centre, known as the "Catete Road prison", until his release in October 1987.

Most of those accused of supporting UNITA were held for long periods without trial. They were reportedly detained in Luanda and various provincial capitals, and in detention camps such as Bentiaba Camp, formerly known as São Nicolau, in Namibe province. For example, Bernardo Cassueca Sautale, allegedly a local UNITA leader and organizer, was believed to remain without trial in Moxico province.

Some detainees were sent to "reeducation" centres for political instruction with the declared aim of "reintegrating" them into society. One such case was that of Silvestre Kiambulo, a former teacher who had joined UNITA's military force. He was officially reported in January to be ready for "reintegration" following a period of "reeducation" which began in October 1985.

Long-term political detainees without links to UNITA included a number of asylum-seekers. Three Zairian asylum-seekers, all former members of the Forces armées zairoises (FAZ), Zairian Armed Forces, were arrested in December 1985 upon arrival in Angola. They remained in detention through 1987 at São Paulo prison in Luanda, although the authorities gave no reasons for their imprisonment and no charges were brought against them.

Some members of the Tocoist Church were detained for long periods after violent disturbances in late 1986 and early 1987 on suspicion of opposing the government. The Church of Our Lord Jesus Christ on Earth, known as the Tocoist Church, had split into two main factions after the death of its founder, Simão Gonçalves Toco, in January 1984. A dispute between the factions resulted in the death of two people in November 1986 near the town of Catete in Bengo province. Jorge Pambu and other members of one faction were subsequently arrested and held in the "Catete Road prison" in Luanda. In February Cristóvão Tavares and other members of the same faction, some of whom were armed, marched to the prison to demand their release. When violence broke out, two members of the security forces and at least 30 demonstrators were reportedly killed. Some unofficial sources estimated the number killed at more than 100. Cristóvão Tavares and a number of others were arrested. There were reports that some sect members who had not been involved in the demonstration were later arrested at their homes and that some of those arrested during the demonstration, who had incurred injuries, died from lack of medical attention in prison. Government spokesmen later accused the leaders of the disturbances of subversive action favouring opponents of the government. Some of those arrested were subsequently released without charge, but Cristóvão Tavares and Jorge Pambu had apparently not been charged or released by the end of the year.

Twenty-nine defendants accused of crimes against the security of the state were tried by the People's Revolutionary Tribunal in January. Fourteen of them were convicted. The charges included treason, conspiracy, rebellion, and economic sabotage. Details of the charges were not made public, but at least six defendants were accused of committing politically-motivated offences in connection with UNITA activities. Four others were charged with membership of a little-known opposition group, the Movimento Nacional de Unidade Socialista Angolano (MUSA), Angolan Socialist Unity Movement. Moisés André Lina, the alleged leader of MUSA, was convicted of treason and sentenced to death. A former major in the armed forces, he had left Angola in 1977 for Portugal, where he formed MUSA. He later returned to Angola secretly and was arrested in 1983. Three other alleged MUSA members were convicted with him and given short prison sentences.

Felix Mateus Murgar, found guilty of murder by the First District Court in Lobito in August, was also sentenced to death. This case was the first in which an ordinary district court was known to have imposed a death sentence. Both he and Moisés André Lina lodged appeals, but the appeals had apparently not been heard by the end of the year. Unofficial sources suggested that further death sentences were imposed by Regional Military Tribunals but this information could not be confirmed. One death sentence imposed in 1986 on an army captain convicted of murder was commuted later that year.

Hundreds of prisoners were held by UNITA during the year. Some 200 of them, including two Cuban pilots, were paraded before journalists in November at UNITA's Jamba headquarters in southeastern Angola. Amnesty International also received reports about the killing of prisoners by UNITA in previous years. For example, Aurora Katalaio and several other people were reportedly accused of witchcraft and put to death in the Jamba area in September 1983. Aurora Katalaio, the widow of a UNITA official, had studied psychology in Switzerland over 10 years earlier.

During the year UNITA reportedly abducted a number of civilians, including expatriates working in Angola, from areas under government control. Three Swedish aid workers were captured north of Luanda in September. One died shortly after his abduction and the other two were released by UNITA at the end of November.

Two nationalist organizations based in Angola, the African National Congress (ANC) of South Africa, and the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) of Namibia, allegedly held prisoners in Angola but their number and the identity of some detainees were not known. At least one person was said to be held near an ANC camp at Quibaxe in Kwanza Norte province, although the reasons for his detention and his legal status in Angola were not clear. Some 100 people suspected of spying for South Africa were also believed to be held by SWAPO at a camp in Kwanza Sul province. They included SWAPO activists who had been prisoners of conscience detained in previous years by the South African administration in Namibia.

Amnesty International was concerned about long-term detention without charge or trial and sought information from the government about the imprisonment of numerous political detainees. The organization received no reply. Amnesty International also appealed to President José Eduardo dos Santos to commute the death sentences imposed on Moisés André Lina and Felix Mateus Murgar if confirmed on appeal.

CANADA

In June the Canadian Parliament voted 148 to 127 against a motion to reinstate the death penalty, which had been abolished for ordinary crimes in 1976.

Following the election of the Progressive Conservative Party to power in 1984, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney had promised to allow a free vote on the subject. During the parliamentary debate he argued that the death penalty did not deter crime and said that Canada's homicide rate had reached a 15-year low since the death penalty was abolished in 1976, with the murder rate in 1986 declining by 20 percent in one year.

Amnesty International wrote to Canadian members of Parliament before the vote, urging them not to support the reintroduction of the death penalty.

In November Amnesty International learned that two prisoners were awaiting extradition to face charges of murder in Florida and Nevada, USA, whose laws provide for the death penalty. Amnesty International urged the Minister of Justice to obtain assurances from the Florida and Nevada authorities that the two men would not be sentenced to death if convicted of murder. It asked the Minister to make such assurances a prerequisite for their extradition.

In June Canada ratified the United Nations Convention against Torture.

CHILE

The harassment of government critics by clandestine groups linked to the security forces intensified in 1987, and torture by the official security forces continued in spite of measures taken by the government which should have been given detainees increased protection. Many political opponents of the government, trade union leaders, journalists and others were detained for short periods and three opposition leaders were banished administratively to remote parts of the country. Judicial irregularities in the trials of political prisoners were reported, and little progress was made in investigating human rights abuses. Three political prisoners were sentenced to death and five new "disappearances" were reported.

The government took preliminary steps to pave the way to a restricted form of civilian government. It prepared for a plebiscite, to be held in 1988 or 1989, opened electoral registers and passed a new law allowing the establishment of non-Marxist political parties. Large numbers of exiles were allowed to return to Chile. The state of siege was not renewed when it lapsed in January and a curfew which had been in force almost continuously since 1973 was lifted. However, the "state of danger to internal peace" and a state of emergency remained in force.

Several steps were taken by the government to protect human rights. In June a new law required the closure of detention centres run by the Central Nacional de Informaciones (CNI), state security police, who had often been cited as responsible for torture. In September the government signed the United Nations Convention against Torture and the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture.

However, the intimidation and harassment of suspected opponents of the government by clandestine groups linked to the security forces intensified. The targets ranged from community leaders and local human rights activists in the poblaciones (poor neighbourhoods) to bishops, actors, politicians and court officials. Chilean human rights groups said that by December they had received reports of over 1,000 cases. Death threats and surveillance were most common. Cats with their throats slit were left outside the homes of some victims. Others had incendiary devices left at their homes, offices or under their cars. Some victims were abducted for up to 24 hours and interrogated either in a vehicle or in a secret detention centre. Many were beaten. Others were given drugs or electric shocks, burned with cigarettes or acid, or had letters or symbols scored into their skin.

The clandestine forces operate with impunity and the government took no effective measures to restrain their activities, despite evidence of the involvement of security forces personnel in some cases. In January, for example, after nearly two years of investigations into the abduction and murder of three Communist Party members in March 1985 (see Amnesty International Report 1986 and 1987), Judge José Canovas concluded that a police unit had been involved. He subsequently closed the case and said that it was impossible for him to proceed because of lack of cooperation from the security forces. In June, however, the investigation was reopened on appeal.

Torture by the official security forces continued. During the first half of the year, a number of political detainees were held incommunicado in CNI detention centers, where they were tortured and interrogated. After the introduction of new legislation in June, the CNI were required to hand over detainees to the regular police forces immediately. However, it emerged that political detainees were being tortured by CNI agents in police stations run by investigaciones (criminal investigations police). Some detainees also said they were taken by the CNI to other unidentified detention centers.

Following agreements reached in 1986, delegates from the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) were able to visit detainees held by the CNI and investigaciones. However, according to detainees' testimony, some had been tortured by the time the visit was allowed to take place. In a number of cases, injuries sustained in police custody were recorded by doctors from the Chilean Institute of Legal Medicine, who were asked by courts dealing with petitions for amparo (similar to habeas corpus) to examine detainees.

Some progress was made in judicial investigations into torture. Judge René García Villegas, in whose jurisdiction lay the main CNI detention centre in Santiago, was investigating about 40 official complaints of torture. He said that his work had led him to the conclusion that the CNI subjected detainees to "terrible tortures", but that the lack of police cooperation was making it impossible to identify those responsible.

Several hundred people were detained for a few hours or days for participation in peaceful political activities such as handing out leaflets and campaigning for free elections. Members of the Christian Democrat and Humanist Parties were arrested while canvassing for signatures to register as a political party under the new law.

Many others were arrested during a strike called on 7 October by the Comando Nacional de Trabajadores (CNT), National Workers Command, in support of a list of workers' demands including higher wages. Three CNT leaders and three leaders of the United Left opposition coalition were imprisoned and charged under the State Security Law for calling the stoppage. By 1 December all had been released on bail.

Restrictions on the right to freedom of expression continued, although four opposition magazines which had been suspended under the state of siege were allowed to resume publication in January. The government took an unprecedented number of legal actions against journalists and editors, as well as politicians and a human rights lawyer whose statements were published in opposition magazines. They were committed for trial on charges of slandering the President or the armed forces. Five journalists were imprisoned for up to two months on similar charges before being released on bail. Juan Pablo Cárdenas, director of the magazine Análisis, was sentenced to spend 541 nights in prison in similar charges: he had to report to prison each night and was released the following morning.

Many exiles were allowed to return from abroad but hundreds remained banned from Chile. Four political leaders challenged the ban by returning secretly and then presenting themselves to the courts. Three were immediately arrested and banished administratively for three months to remote parts of the country by the Interior Ministry, the first time the authorities had used this measure since 1985. After two months the banishment order against former Communist Party Members of Parliament Julieta Campusano and Mireya Baltra was lifted but Clodomiro Almeyda, a Socialist Party leader, completed the three-month term. He was then imprisoned on charges of illegal entry to the country and being as "apologist for terrorism". At the end of 1987 he was still in prison, awaiting the outcome of appeals against two 541-day prison sentences imposed for each offense.

The courts consistently failed to take into account evidence submitted on behalf of victims of human rights abuses. For example, in the case of Carmen Quintana and Rodrigo Rojas, who were burnt in July 1986, both the military prosecutor and the higher courts apparently ignored extensive medical and witness evidence that the two were arrested and set on fire by a military patrol. Instead, they accepted the army version that the two were burnt by accident when Carmen Quintana kicked over a bottle of inflammable liquid. Lawyers acting on behalf of Carmen Quintana complained that she and witnesses had been harassed and reported other procedural irregularities, for example, important witnesses not being called.

Efforts by a few civilian judges to pursue investigations were hampered by the police and military not cooperating or blocked by the transfer of cases to military courts. Some court officials, such as Judge René García Villegas, received death threats. A new law modifying the Code of Military Justice passed in November gave the authorities further extensive powers to refuse to hand over information about police and the armed forces to the courts if they considered it to affect the security of the state or of individuals.

Investigations into approximately 700 "disappearances" between 1973 and 1977 suffered a major setback when the Supreme Court upheld a 1986 Appeal Court decision to close an investigation into 10 "disappearance" cases. Judge Carlos Cerda, a member of the Appeal Court, had uncovered important information about the methods used by the police and military to eliminate political opponents of the government in the mid-1970s. He argued against the Appeal Court decision to apply an amnesty law passed in 1978 to the accused, on the grounds that his investigations were not finished.

Five political activists were reported to have "disappeared" in September, leading to fears that the practice might be reemerging. Alejandro Pinochet Arenas was last seen on 10 September being forced into a car in Santiago by several unidentified civilian assailants believed to be government agents. Human rights lawyers said that the circumstances surrounding the "disappearance" of Julio Muñoz, Manuel Sepulveda, José Peña and Gonzalo Fuenzalida also gave reason to believe that they had been abducted by government agents. The authorities denied holding them.

Long-term political prisoners being tried by military courts held a series of hunger-strikes to draw attention to irregularities in their trials and to protest against the death penalty. Their complaints included restrictions on the rights of the defence, the use of confessions extracted under torture, and long delays in trials. Human rights groups' statistics indicated that only a quarter of the approximately 450 political prisoners had been sentenced by the end of 1987. Some of those awaiting sentence had been in detention since 1984 or earlier.

Particular criticism was levelled against the Special Military Prosecutor, Fernando Torres. He was investigating the cases against approximately 100 defendants in four trials charged in connection with armed actions attributed to the Frente Patriótico Manuel Rodriguez (FPMR), Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front, an armed opposition group, including the September 1986 assassination attempt on President Augusto Pinochet. He ordered a number of the defendants to be held incommunicado for up to 40 days after their arrest without access to legal counsel, often after they had been tortured. Other defendants reported that he and his court officials threatened them. In his December report to the U.N. General Assembly, the Special Rapporteur on Chile criticized him for "a bias inappropriate in an official of his rank".

One of those charged by the Special Military Prosecutor was prisoner of conscience Dr. Ramiro Olivares, a doctor working with the church human rights organization, Vicariate of Solidarity. He was accused of "assisting terrorists" after he gave medical treatment to a man, unaware that he had been injured in an attack on a shop. He was eventually released on bail on 29 December after successfully petitioning the Supreme Court for the charges against him to be reduced (see Amnesty International Report 1987). It appeared that the case against Dr. Olivares was intended to obstruct the work of the Vicariate by linking it to armed opposition groups.

Three political prisoners were sentenced to death in April after being convicted of participating in the killing of the military governor of Santiago in 1983. At the end of 1987 they were still awaiting the outcome of an appeal to the Military Appeals Court. One political prisoner, Carlos García Herrera, had his death sentence commuted to life imprisonment in October when the Military Appeals Court failed to reach the unanimous verdict required by Chilean law to uphold a death sentence. However, the government then submitted a complaint to the Supreme Court, which was still pending at the end of 1987, against the one judge who had voted against the death sentence. It argued that he was at fault in voting not to uphold the death sentence.

Twelve alleged FPMR members were killed by the CNI on 15 and 16 June in circumstances suggesting that they were the victims of extrajudicial executions. In one incident, in which seven people died, there was evidence that all the shots were fired from the direction of the security forces and none from where the victims were. In another, it appeared that the victim was shot dead from a van as he was walking along the street near his mother's house.

Amnesty International urged the government to take action against clandestine forces and to give protection to those threatened. It called for further measures to be introduced to prevent torture and appealed to the authorities to permit detainees held incommunicado by police to be given access to lawyers and doctors. The organization called on the authorities to review the judicial procedures in the trials of political prisoners which fell short of international standards for fair trials and appealed for the commutation of all death sentences. It also continued to press for full investigations into all human rights abuses, including "disappearances". An Amnesty International delegation visited Chile in October and met officials of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, representatives of human rights organizations, political parties, the Archbishop of Santiago and other church representatives.

COLUMBIA

The year was marked by a dramatic increase in human rights violations. Hundreds of suspected opponents of the armed forces were detained, tortured or killed by "death squads" apparently composed of military personnel or civilians acting on behalf of the armed forces or with their acquiescence. The victims extended beyond those identified with the left-wing opposition to include members of virtually any independent organization or profession considered to be critical of the armed forces' campaign against "subversion". Despite mounting evidence of the armed forces' involvement, the government continued to contend that the "death squads" were composed of independent groups of right-wing extremists whom the authorities could neither control nor disband. In certain areas, civilian defence squads organized and equipped by the armed forces to assist in their country-insurgency activities were also alleged to have been responsibile for torture and extrajudicial executions of civilians.

There was increased activity by armed opposition groups and a rise in the number of reported clashes between the armed forces and the largest such group, Furezas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia (FARC), the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, although formally the FARC remained within a peace process initiated in 1984. There were new reports that the FARC and other armed opposition groups had summarily executed a number of their captives.

In December Colombia ratified the United Nations Convention against Torture.

The area most affected by the upsurge in political violence in 1987 was Antioquia department in northeast Colombia. In the banana plantation region of Urabá, more than 50 people, mostly agricultural workers, their union leaders and advisers, were killed in the first half of 1987 against a background of protracted pay negotiations between the major unions and the plantation owners. The killings were carried out by heavily armed men in civilian clothes believed to be employed by landowners acting with the complicity of the armed forces. Extensive counter-insurgency operations made Urabá one of the most heavily militarized zones in Colombia, yet the killers were able to operate with impunity, passing freely thorugh military controls.

There were further "death squad" killings in Medellin, the capital of Antioquia department. Scores of people including trade unionists, students, university professors and human rights activists were killed, particularly during the second half of the year, by groups operating under names such as "Amor a Medellin". Love for Medellin, and "Muerte a Revolucionarios del Nordeste", Death to Revolutionaries of the Northeast. Civic leaders and human rights activists responded by organizing demonstrations demanding the right to life. On 13 August over 3,000 people participated in a "march for life" through Medellin, led by the Comité de Defensa de los Derechos Humanos (CDDH), Medellin Committee for the Defence of Human Rights. The demonstration was in protest against recent "death squad" killings of five students and four lecturers at the University of Antioquia. Some of the victims had been tortured before being shot. The local police said that they saw the killings as isolated incidents, without apparent political motivation. However, seven of the nine victims, it was later established, had been members of a new political group Frente Popular, Popular Front, and had been arrested previously by military personnel during a demonstration on 1 May. They were said to have been held in the headquarters of the army's Fourth Brigade and to have been photographed and fingerprinted before they were released uncharged after a few hours.●

HAIL "DISCOVERY," AND A SALUTE TO MORTON-THIOKOL OF UTAH

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the citizens of Utah take special pride in Discovery's launch on September 28. In many ways, we Utahns personified Winston Churchill's commitment to "Defiance in Defeat."

The country felt defeated over the Challenger disaster; not only was our space program in disarray, but the private sector, which the 1958 Space Act mandated to lead the charge into space, was also reeling.

Perhaps the most profound sense of loss hung over the families. But anyone who knows the special nature of Utahns, knows also that their grief was acutely shared by the citizens of my State, and more specifically by the employees of the Morton-Thiokol Co.

Like the other citizens of Utah, Thiokol's employees were defiant, determined, and dedicated. They would do whatever it took to restore our Nation to prominence in space.

What did they do? Let me tell you, Mr. President.

Less than 2 months after the Challenger tragedy, Thiokol's engineers began planning our reentry into space.

Their efforts began in the laboratory, testing O-ring materials, developing new greases, evaluating the impact of temperature on new designs, and many other procedures.

Then there were the tests—42 in all, before there's a fully redesigned solid rocket motor emerged.

Mr. President, there were also setbacks; some came at a time when Thiokol experienced other disruptions, one involving the loss of life when an engine exploded. Making rocket motors is inherently risky.

Morton-Thiokol never lost its self-confidence; more than 4,500 people committed themselves, their professional stature, and their hearts to their effort. It was a labor of love, and it showed. On Wednesday, the spirits of every American soared with Discovery—as President Reagan has said throughout his tenure in office: "America is back."

The people of Utah have helped put us back in space; we retreated a little, but we have come back stronger than ever.●

S. 2607, STEWART-McKINNEY HOMELESS ASSISTANCE REAUTHORIZATION

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, it is a pleasure to join my distinguished colleague Senator JOHN GLENN in urging adoption of the conference report on S. 2607, the omnibus Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act of 1988.

The Stewart B. McKinney Act provides assistance to the most vulnerable segment of our popultion—the homeless. Oftentimes when we speak of the homeless, we tend to lump them together, and to speak to their needs as if they were a single uniform group. Yet, if we begin to look at the homeless not as faceless street people, but rather as unique individuals each having his own set of problems, a diverse picture of homelessness in America emerges.

Let's take a minute to look beyond the statisics and take a closer look at that group of Americans who we call homeless.

Contrary to popular belief, not all homeless people in America are unemployed. A full 22 percent of homeless Americans are employed either full or part time, pointing up the discrepancy between minimum wage rates and the ability to purchase affordable housing.

Also homelessness is not just a big city problem—it is a national problem. According to the campaign to end hunger and homelessness, in 1987, the city with the highest rate of growth in its homeless population was Kansas City, Missouri—not Washington, or New York, or Los Angeles. And the number of homeless individuals has increased dramatically in rural areas as well. In the State of Iowa, for example, the number of person nights spent in shelters increased from 28,000 in 1984 to 4.57 million in 1987, an increase of 16,000 percent. And this number does not include those homeless individuals who are not fortunate enough to find shelter. Many more are sleeping in abandoned buildings, automobiles, or on the streets.

Finally, oftentimes we tend to think of the homeless as primarily a group of mentally disabled substance abusers—hence the myth of the homeless as a collection of single, male alcoholics on street corners. However, a closer look at these statistics reveals that this is not the case. A full one-third of the homeless are families with children. Indeed, only about 30 percent of the homeless suffer from some form of mental illness.

Mr. President, these are truly the quiet people whose needs this administration has so long ignored. Federally assisted housing starts have declined dramatically during the Reagan years, from 200,000 per year during the Ford and Carter administrations to a current annual level of 25,000. And assistance to the poor has been cut back in other areas as well. Reductions in essential social services spending also have pushed poor families to their limits, further swelling the ranks of the homeless.

As a member of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, I was proud to have been a part of last year's efforts to provide assistance to homeless Americans. However, in the ensuing year, State and Federal officials alike have reported growing difficulties in ensuring that Federal aid is being provided to those most in need. S. 2607, as reported by the House and Senate conferees, contains several new provisions designed to enhance the delivery of assistance to homeless Americans. I would like to take a few minutes to elaborate on the merits of some of these provisions.

S. 2607 strengthens Federal efforts at homeless assistance by appointing regional coordinators to oversee efforts at providing assistance to the homeless in each of the 10 Federal regions. These regional coordinators would be required to conduct biennial workshops to assist State governments in the administration of the Stewart-McKinney Act.

To enhance cooperative efforts between the Federal Government and the States, S. 2607 requires the Federal Interagency Council on the Homeless to distribute a bimonthly bulletin to the States summarizing Federal assistance programs and funding deadlines. Federal agencies administering homeless assistance programs are required to submit funding timeliness to the Federal Interagency Council for inclusion in these bimonthly newsletters.

In order to ensure that homeless assistance is targeted to those individuals most in need, S. 2607 requires the Federal Emergency Management Agency to develop new statutory formulas for the administration of emergency food and shelter grants. This restructuring of Federal assistance efforts is essential to ensuring that homeless assistance meets the needs of those individuals it is designed to serve.

Finally, S. 2607 broadens the definition of surplus Federal property to be used by the homeless to include underutilized Federal buildings. This would permit Federal property which has been relinquished only on a temporary basis to be used as shelters for the homeless.

I urge my distinguished colleagues to join with Senator GLENN and myself in support of the conference report on S. 2607. In doing so, we will provide the homeless with the food and shelter so necessary in their hour of need.●

ON BEHALF OF CARLOS ALFERO

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues about yet another disturbing action by General Noriega. Last week, some of Noriega's men abducted a permanent U.S. resident from a flight destined for the United States and held him in costody without any charges for days. He was only recently released.

Mr. President, this man, Carlos Alfero, was down in Panama on business for the Bank of America. Like many Panamanians in the United States, he is a member of the civic crusade from New York.

No charges were placed on Mr. Alfero, and his relatives in Panama, including his mother who is an American citizen, were not notified of his abduction. Most offensively, Mr. President, Carlos Alfero was brutally beaten while he was in captivity.

Carlos Alfero had not been in Panama for nearly a year. His mother and brother are now in Panama. General Noriega apparently believes that Carlos is a part of some larger conspiracy. Well, Mr. President, if it is the conspiracy to move toward a civilian government, with constitutional freedoms, and fair elections, then we are all guilty of such a conspiracy.

What we are witnessing, Mr. President, is a display of raw dictatorial power. He is attempting to brutally neutralized his opposition. We must not allow this without action or protest. Mr. Alfero's abduction caused much uproar in Panama. We must ask ourselves, Mr. President, if there had not been an immediate outcry, would Mr. Alfero be free now? Or, Mr. President, would Mr. Alfero simply have "disappeared?"

Mr. President, Panamanians often say that we helped create the monster called Noriega. In the past 6 months, Mr. President, we have made the monster abominable. The longer the United States remains silent, the farther Noriega will try to go.

Every time we acquiesce to another Noriega outrage, we further abdicate our influence in Panama. Today, it is Carlos Alfero, a U.S. permanent resident. Tomorrow, what will be in store for the nearly 50,000 Americans in Panama? How much more harassment do our servicemen deserve to endure by Noriega? How many more Cubans must we observe in Panama before it becomes a national security concern?

Mr. President, earlier this month when Noriega's men confiscated U.S. military goods at a port near Colon, the United States made gestures toward a military response. Apparently, this persuaded the Panamanians to lift their seizure of this equipment. Mr. President, we need more of this type of response.

It is my hope that a strong message of outrage to General Noriega has been made by our Government regarding the treatment of Carlos Alfero. It must be made very clear that the United States will not tolerate this kind of treatment of U.S. citizens or permanent residents.●

FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES FOR U.S. SENATE EMPLOYEES

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, on Tuesday the House of Representatives passed the fair employment practices resolution (H. Res. 558). The vote on the resolution was 408 to 12 which represents an overwhelming commitment to improving employees' rights in the House. During the debate on the resolution, Congresswoman MARY ROSE OAKAR said, "I would hope that the Senate would follow our example on this bill." I want to align myself with her sentiments. Indeed, I have called for legislation on this issue in the past. However, partly because we have not held hearings on this issue in this Congress, I would not want to introduce a resolution that will die with the end of the session. Mr. President, I intend to introduce legislation early in the 1st session of the 101st Congress which will codify a similar office to the one created in House Resolution 558.

Congressional fair employment legislation is long overdue.

The image that we portray is important to the American people. That image right now is clouded by the appearance of hypocrisy at best and inconsistency, at the very least. The American people see inconsistency in the fact that we vote for and pass laws which affect every member of the work force except the very people who help to draft those laws—our staffs. The inconsistency exists in civil rights laws, in occupational health and safety laws for employees' working conditions, in safety and health conditions, and in other aspects of employment for persons who work on Capitol Hill.

We, in the Congress, are like an island not subject to the mainland's rules and regulations. Should the House and Senate employees be denied the rights that all other employees take for granted? I do not believe so.

There is another aspect to this issue. It is the issue of simple fairness. Is it fair for us as employers to hold up one standard for other employers while not being willing to meet the same standard ourselves. If it is good for them, it should be good for us. I happen to think that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was good for the country—it should be good for the Congress. The Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 was good for the country—it should be good for the Congress. The Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 was good for the country—it should be good for the Congress.

I do not believe any Member of this body would consciously discriminate, but the statistics on employment in the U.S. Senate reflect a staff that is not representative of the population at large. For example, of the estimated 850 professional staff positions on our committees and subcommittees, blacks hold less than 30 of those positions. That is less than 5 percent. Blacks, by contrast, make up about 12 percent of our total population.

The situation is roughly equivalent for female staffers. Women only make up less than 25 percent of the professional staff, while being the majority of the overall population.

Mr. President, perhaps the most surprising aspect of those statistics is the fact that they represent improvements over the past several years. While the figures in and of themselves do not prove discriminatory practices, they suggest a need to be much more sensitive to concerns about our hiring and employment conditions and procedures.

The legislation which I intend to introduce early next session will not, I repeat will not, force any member to hire any person that they don't want to hire. The legislation will not seek to impose any quotas in hiring practices. Neither will the legislation impede the firing of incompetent employees.

The legislation will be patterned after the House resolution (H. Res. 558) which merely provides a framework for dealing with charges of discrimination or abuse. It will spell out procedures to be followed in cases where complaints are filed.

Mr. President, I know that some Members are concerned about the separation of power issue. The office created by this legislation will be congressionally created, answerable only to the Congress and staffed only by congressional, not executive branch employees.

I intend to hold hearings on this matter in the Governmental Affairs Committee. Further, I believe that these rights should be firmly encased in a statutory base, not a resolution.

To those Members of this body who may have reservations about the need for this legislation, I maintain that the need is there.

To those of you who have expressed an interest in moving forward on this issue, I assure that we will do so, early in the next Congress.

I know that Senators McCAIN, LEAHY, and LEVIN have all done excellent preliminary work on this issue and I look forward to having their input as we move forward to ensure rights for all congressional employees. It is time to remove the stigma of the Congress being "the last plantation."●

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise to offer my comments about an individual who has made a great contribution to the Department of Transportation, Deputy Assistant Secretary William H. Fitzgerald. Over the years Bill, or "Fitz" as he is known to many people, has provided invaluable assistance and advice with respect to the Transportation Department's budget. He plans to leave the Department in the coming months which will be a great loss to all of us who have come to rely on his judgment and skill.

As the ranking member of the Transportation and Related Agencies Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, I know that Fitz's advice has been of great value to the subcommittee's work. Fitz has a way of deciphering complex budget documents and translating them into understandable language that has made our work on the Transportation Department's budget much easier. Often under severe time constraints, he has provided assistance to the subcommittee and proved time and again to be the consummate professional that he is.

Fitz is a graduate of the U.S. Coast Guard Academy and retired from the Coast Guard as a captain in 1971. While in the Coast Guard he was awarded a Commendation Medal. He also found time to earn an MBA degree, with distinction, from Harvard Business School in 1958. Since 1972, Fitz has served in various positions at the Department of Transportation starting out as a budget analyst and rising to Deputy Assistant Secretary. He is married to Patricia T. Moriarty, and they have two children, Paul David and Anne Elizabeth Cullinane.

Mr. President, I am sure that all of my Senate and House colleagues and their staffs who have worked with Fitz on transportation issues have the same high regard for him that I do. I wish him and his family the best in the years ahead. He will be missed.●

SUPPORTING GIRL SCOUT "FIGHT DRUGS" INITIATIVE

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, as a former Girl Scout I'm delighted to be a supporter of the Girl Scouts of the U.S.A. in their fight to stamp out drug use among our Nation's young people. The Girl Scouts "Fight Drugs" initiative focuses on mobilizing Girl Scouts ages 5 to 8 to take the lead among their peers in the war against drugs. With more than 3 million members, the Girl Scouts is the world's largest voluntary organization for girls. With a commitment to form a learning network by sharing what they have learned about the dangers of drug use with neighbors, schoolmates and family members, I believe the Girl Scouts have established a great way to reach our communities.

I want to thank and commend Ms. Betty F. Pilsbury, the national president of the Girl Scouts of the U.S.A., who served as a 1988 Presidential appointee to the White House Conference for a Drug Free America, for starting this initiative. The "Fight Drugs" program has lead many Girl Scout councils to successfully implement drug education projects in their hometowns.

I am proud and excited to know that the spirit of volunteerism, and community service is still a viable and effective approach that citizens can use to join in and make a difference, to make their communities a better place to live, and to raise their children. I believe every time we get a kid to just say no to drugs, we say yes to America's future. The Girls Scouts have said yes to Americas future. As I told the Girl Scouts at a luncheon meeting last week, "if the Girl Scout promise and the Girl Scout law were good enough for me as a Girl Scout, then they are good enough for me as a U.S. Senator."●

THE WOMEN'S BUSINESS OWNERSHIP ACT OF 1988

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I want to thank the chairman of the Small Business Committee, Senator BUMPERS, for joining me in pushing for speedy consideration of the Women's Business Ownership Act, H.R. 5050. This measure is intended to knock down some of the roadblocks for the fastest growing sector of the American business community: women-owned businesses.

I also want to congratulate the chairman of the House Small Business Committee, Congressman JOHN LAFALCE, for his work in developing H.R. 5050, which was the inspiration for the original women's business ownership bill (S. 2735) that I introduced in the Senate on August 11, 1988.

Frankly, Mr. President, I was prepared for a more lengthy and involved legislative route for my bill. But when Senator BUMPERS has a chance to study this legislation, he saw its merits, and decided it was worthy of immediate consideration. Again, I applaud him and thank him for his vision.

The House Small Business Committee conducted six hearings earlier this year on the issue of women in business, and those hearings demonstrated that the business community still has several barriers to women business owners.

Although women entrepreneurs are building successful and healthy businesses, they are not doing it with the help of the present system. They are doing it in spite of the system.

One of the major obstacles to female entrepreneurship is the lack of management training and technical assistance. This nation has a growing nucleus of female MBA's, but graduate buisness schools produce people oriented to corporate life. They do not train anyone—male or female—for the unique demands of setting up a business on your own.

H.R. 5050, as amended, will set up a limited, $10 million program to finance demonstration projects that give that type of training and assistance.

Women business owners also run into problems when it comes to business loans. The Equal Credit Opportunity Act of 1974 outlaws sex discrimination as far as personal loans are concerned; but it doesn't cover business loans. We think that bears investigation, and H.R. 5050 gives the Federal Reserve Board the authority to look into the possibility of classifying business loans that might be covered by the ECOA provisions.

In focusing on the plight of women in business, we're constrained by the lack of pertinent statistics. So H.R. 5050 lists several ways in which data compiled by the Federal Government will be improved.

And last, the hearings brought to light one key fact: we are just in the initial stages of grappling with this problem. We are flying in the dark with few navigational aids.

So this measure establishes a National Women's Business Council. The council will bring together high-level policymakers and successful business people, who will then put together a multiyear plan of attack. That plan will recommend both legislative and structural changes, and will be presented by the end of 1989. There is also a sunset provision that disbands the Council after five years.

One final observation. Testimony at the House hearings also showed that women now own around 30 percent of all American businesses. But those businesses have only 1 percent of Federal contracts. H.R. 5050 and my companion bill, S. 2735, encouraged Federal agencies to rectify that situation. We have removed the procurement assistance provisions from the revised bill, but the disparity in Federal contracting still needs to be explored. I intend to devote attention to this matter in the upcoming 101st Congress.

Mr. President, this legislation received almost unanimous support in the House of Representatives. It has been endorsed by the National Federation of Independent Business and other groups representing the small business community and women entrepreneurs. I congratulate my colleagues for giving it their endorsement.●

THE RETIREMENT OF LT. GEN. LEONARD PERROOTS

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, As chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, I have come to know and respect one of the truly outstanding leaders in the U.S. intelligence community and, particularly, a leader in the field of military intelligence. I rise to pay tribute to the Director of Defense Intelligence Agency, Lt. Gen. Leonard H. Perroots, U.S. Air Force, who is retiring in December 1988 after a 34-year career of most distinguished service to this Nation.

The lessons of history, the experiences of the 1980's and the changes we see on the horizon ahead all underscore the vitally important contributions that intelligence can and must make to the security and well-being of the United States. When we speak of intelligence, we are speaking first and foremost of the men and women serving in our intelligence community. General Perroots throughout his career, from his first service as a squadron intelligence officer up through the intelligence ranks at the Tactical Air Command, U.S. Air Force in Europe, Air Force Assistant Chief of Staff for Intelligence and Director, Defense Intelligence Agency stands as the finest example of a truly outstanding military intelligence professional.

During the years General Perroots has served as Director, DIA's responsibilities have significantly expanded and become more critical to the success of the President, other senior policymakers and both to the national level here in Washington and to the operational commanders in the field. Under General Perroots' leadership DIA has grown in stature. I speak for my colleagues on the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence when I praise the magnitude of General Perroots' support and DIA's support to the committee, the timeliness of that support and its professional objectivity. I can think of no better example than the contributions the Defense Intelligence Agency made and that General Perroots made personally over months and months during our committee's involvement in the Intermediate Nuclear Forces [INF] Treaty ratification process.

It is indeed an honor and a privilege to pay tribute to this distinguished military officer who has set the highest standards for military intelligence and who has brought tremendous credit to himself, the Air Force, and the Nation. We extend our thanks to Gen. Lenny Perroots and offer every best wish for future success.●

HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL MUSEUM

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, last Wednesday an historic dedication ceremony took place, marking the laying of the cornerstone of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum.

The Holocaust Museum has a twofold purpose. It is being built in rememberance of those who died at the hands of the Nazis during World War II and it is designed to educate future generations so that this type of tragedy will never happen again.

Last week's ceremony was indeed moving—particularly the keynote address delivered by President Reagan. As a member of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, which is charged with building the museum, I would like to share this moving speech with my colleagues and would ask that President Reagan's remarks at the cornerstone-laying ceremony for the Holocaust Memorial Museum be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The remarks follow:

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT AT CORNERSTONE-LAYING CEREMONY FOR HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL MUSEUM

The PRESIDENT. Thank you very much. Ladies and gentlemen, good morning. We gather here today, as we have been so eloquently told, here for a solemn, profound, saddening, and yet triumphant occasion. It's an occasion that commemorates all we have lost, the irreplaceable humanity whose monstrous end will ever testify to the hellish depths of human evil.

But it's an occasion that commemorates something else as well. It commemorates the seriousness of our intention—as human beings, as Americans, and, in the case of many here today, as Jews—to keep the memory of the six million fresh and enduring.

We who did not go their way owe them this: We must make sure that their deaths have posthumous meaning. We must make sure that from now until the end of days all humankind stares this evil in the face, that all humankind knows what this evil looks like and how it came to be. And when we truly know it for what it was, then and only then can we be sure that it will never come again.

Some people say evil of this degree is incomprehensible. They say we will never understand it. Some people even say that the word "evil" is insufficient to describe the Holocaust—and instead they use terms like mad, crazy, insane. I think they are wrong. What we saw there, at Treblinka and Belsen and Auschwitz and Dachau, was the image of the inferno. That may have been the ultimate purpose of those who made the Holocaust—a grotesque effort to hurl the Earth into the very pit of the serpent.

I believe the Holocaust is comprehensible. Indeed, we must comprehend it. We have no choice; the future of mankind depends upon it. And that's what we are here for—to lay the cornerstone for the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, which will help us understand and make it impossible for us to forget.

The Holocaust Memorial Council is committed to this purpose. It is composed of Republicans and Democrats and Independents who understand that partisanship has no place here. There are Jews who serve on it, and Catholics, and Protestants, who understand that religious divisions have no place here. It is composed of those who came through the flames of the Holocaust and those who did not, for we've required no rules for membership except an unyielding commitment to our mission to keep the memory alive.

To fulfill that mission, the museum will study the history of the Holocaust, provide an invaluable resource for researchers, and bring together in one place the greatest array of information and knowledge on this necessary subject.

It will examine the nature and meaning of the continuing curse that is anti-Semitism. I think all of us here are aware of those, even among our own countrymen, who have dedicated themselves to the disgusting task of minimizing or even denying the truth of the Holocaust. This act of intellectual genocide must not go unchallenged, and those who advance these views must be held up to the scorn and wrath of all good and thinking people in this nation and across the world.

And yet just as we must challenge it here at home, so too we must challenge anti-Semitism abroad. We know that in certain nations, an infamous and fraudulent document called "The Protocols of the Elders of Zion" is still being distributed and in some cases taught in school. This, the most profoundly cynical piece of anti-Semitic filth ever produced is full of libels toward the Jewish people, particularly the horrifying "blood libel." We must send the message out to all the world—a blood libel against the Jewish people is a blood libel against all humankind, and no decent person will stand for it. (Applause.)

We know that the United Nations, whose peacekeepers were honored only last week for their service to the world, has yet to repeal its infamous resolution equating Zionism and racism. We know where such intellectual infamy can lead. The world has learned that when the truth is turned on its head, holocausts become possible.

And there are the subtler forms of anti-Semitism. There is the anti-Semitism that seeks to deny Jews their independent identity. In these days of glasnost, we hear talk about liberalizing attitudes toward Judaism in the Soviet Union. But it is still true that a Jew must have courage to rise and say with pride, "Yes, I am a Jew, I wish to study Hebrew, and I wish to emigrate to the homeland of my people." Those who speak those words know what follows them—the despair of waiting for permission to do that which is a basic human right—to go where they will when they choose.

There are still tens of thousands—maybe even hundreds of thousands—of Soviet Jews who wait to leave the Soviet Union so that they may live free as Jews. And here, as we lay this cornerstone and vow that the Jewish people will never stand alone against tyranny, I want to ask the Soviet leaders a question. Where are those exit visas? Where are they? (Applause.)

And you and I and all Americans of good will are united in the challenge I propose to the Soviet leaders today. I say, let these people go. (Applause.)

The Jews of silence, Elie Wiesel called them two decades ago, but they're silent no more. They are obeying what the great theologian, Emil Fackenheim, called the 614th Commandment, the Commandment of Auschwitz. And that commandment is this: "Let there be Jews." That commandment is dear to the hearts of all. The Jewish people were on this Earth at the time of the pyramids. Those structures are still standing, and the Jews are still here. We must make sure that when the tall towers of our greatest cities have crumbled to dust in the turnings of time, the Jewish people will still be on this Earth—(applause)—to cast their blessings and remind all of us that this world and the people who live upon it have a history and, yes, even a destiny.

This week we celebrate one of the worst anniversaries of this century. Last Friday, 50 years ago, the European nations met in Munich and accommodated the expansionist designs of Adolf Hitler. Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain returned to Britain and proclaimed that he had brought "peace for our time." And 11 months later the Nazi tanks rolled into Poland and the war began. With the invasion of Poland the West awoke, may God be thanked, but at what—and the Nazis were finally defeated. But at what cost? At what cost?

Even to think about the cost makes sleep impossible. Had the West awakened to the meaning of Hitler, would those dead be with us today? Would there even be a need for this museum?

It's a question without an answer. But we must never allow ourselves to have to ask that question again. American troops who liberated the concentration camps saw things no human eyes should ever see. But if we in America remain strong—if we hold fast and true to the conviction that, yes, there are things worth fighting for, there are things worth dying for, and we will heed the call if we must—humans will never suffer so, nor will others be called upon to save them from such suffering.

Before I go, I'd like to tell those of you who do not know it already about a song that was sung in the camps. It was a Yiddish song, and like many of the camp ballads, it was not about the hunger and the torture and the dying, but about the coming of the Messiah. "What will happen," the song asks, "when the Messiah comes?" And the answer is: "When the Messiah comes, we'll have a banquet."

And the banquet the song describes is no ordinary repast. For at that Messianic banquet, the guests will eat of the creature called the Leviathan, and will drink the finest and sweetest wines. And they will sit and watch while Miriam the prophetess dances for their entertainment. And then they will sit and listen as King David plays songs for them on his harp. And they will sit and listen to a lecture given by the wisest of men, King Solomon. And they will sit and study the Torah with Moses.

I hope you will forgive me if I say that I believe those who perished in the Holocaust have, after long suffering, attended that banquet. I cannot imagine our Lord would deny their request. We here will inscribe their names in human memory, and pray that God may bless us all.●

XERNONA CLAYTON

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, on October 20-23, the National Association of Media Women, an organization which promotes awareness and broader opportunities for black women in the communications industry will hold its 23d annual meeting in Detroit.

I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to a woman who, among other things, has served several terms as national president of this organization, Ms. Xernona Clayton. Ms. Clayton is an accomplished and respected veteran in the competitive communications industry and a committed activist in community and public service efforts.

Ms. Clayton's career spans several decades and is impressive for its depth as well as its scope. In 1967, she began her broadcast in Atlanta as the nationally acclaimed host of "The Xernona Clayton Show," the South's first black-hosted television program. She later became affiliated with the Turner Broadcasting System, where she produced documentary specials, and hosted and later produced a public affairs show. Currently, she is associate corporate vice president of urban affairs for Turner Broadcasting in Atlanta.

She also serves on the board of trustees for five national associations including the Martin Luther King, Jr. Center, the NAACP, and the Multiple Sclerosis Society. In addition she is a member of the National Issues Forum of the Jimmy Carter Presidential Library and has been a guest lecturer at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government.

Ms. Clayton is the recipient of several deserved awards, including being named as "One of the Georgia's Most Prestigious Women" (1984), Black Georgian of the Year (1984) and one of the Top Black Business and Professional Women (1985). She has also received the U.S. Air Force's Recruiting Services's American Spirit Award.

Ms. Clayton's commitment and energy extends to her community as well, particularly through her deep commitment to civil rights. Her work has opened doors and dismantled barriers which have long prevented others from achieving their full professional potential. In 1966 she coordinated the activities of Atlanta's black doctors in a project which resulted in the desegregation of all hospital facilities in Atlanta. This project served as a model for other States and eventually received a national honor from the National Medical Association.

Ms. Clayton's record of professional achievement and community service speaks for itself. She is a woman for whom excellence is not a goal, but a standard. Her example should serve as an inspiration for us all.●

RICHARD BARTON SMITH

● Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I rise to recognize Richard Barton Smith, a fellow Tennessean who has given 25 years of dedicated service to the U.S. Senate. Dick can proudly reflect on a distinguished career under eight Sergeants of Arms.

Dick is a native of the mountainous area of Oneida, TN, where he grew up and attended school. In 1963, during the time that my father, Senator Albert Gore, Sr., served in the Senate, Dick came to Washington and begun his Senate tenure at the young age of 25 as an elevator operator, and soon moved to the Senate Post Office.

In 1972, under the Sergeant of Arms, Bob Dunphy, Dick began a decade of employment in the Service Department as supervisor of the equipment division. He was promoted to deputy director of the Service Department in 1978. In 1982 Dick accepted the position of Doorkeeper of the Family and Staff Galleries.

Tennessee welcomes back Dick, his wife Vivian, and their son Richard. Dick plans to spend his retirement years in Oneida, enjoying the pleasures of doing things he loves to do, such as woodworking.

I would like to personally thank Dick for his many years of exemplary service. I urge my distinguished colleagues to join me in commending Richard Barton Smith for his dedication to the U.S. Senate.●

REFORM AND HUMAN RIGHTS IN THE SOVIET UNION AND EASTERN EUROPE

● Mr. DeCONCINI. Mr. President, during the past 2 years I have had the privilege of serving with my colleague, STENY HOYER, as Cochairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe. As this session of the 100th Congress draws to a close, I would like to offer some reflections on current developments in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

It is clear to me that historic changes are underway in these countries. In the Soviet Union, General Secretary Gorbachev has referred to his domestic policy as "a revolution without bloodshed." The phrase is apt. In his efforts to increase the U.S.S.R.'s economic productivity and output, and ensure that his country enters the next century as a superpower in all respects, Mr. Gorbachev is trying to reverse the effects of decades of centralized control. He is attempting to change the attitudes and work habits of factory workers and farmers throughout the Soviet Union, as well as those of bureaucrats in Moscow. He wants to restructure the U.S.S.R.'s basic economic and political institutions, with emphasis upon candor and popular participation at all levels.

Mr. Gorbachev's problem is to demonstrate to a skeptical Soviet work force that his approach will result in tangible improvements in Soviet living standards—meaning primarily more, and higher quality food, housing, and consumer goods. Thus far, he has been unable to do this. In fact, living standards may have declined on a per capita basis since Gorbachev became General Secretary in March 1985.

Initiating political change is evidently easier than economic reform. The General Secretary has announced a major shift of power from the party to the legislature, which is to undergo total reorganization next spring. We have just witnessed dramatic changes in the central party apparatus, with a younger Politburo and Secretariat and a streamlined Central Committee apparatus resulting from the suddenly-convened Central Committee plenum of September 30. And at the Supreme Soviet meeting on the next day, Gorbachev replaced Andrei Gromyko as the U.S.S.R.'s Chief of State.

But just how and when these political changes will impact upon economic reform remains to be seen. Meanwhile, the General Secretary and his supporters must contend with assertive nationalism in Azerbaidzhan, Armenia and the Baltic republics.

As with Gorbachev's domestic policy, his foreign policy thus far has emphasized words rather than deeds. Termed "new political thinking," his declared approach focuses upon common global themes rather than global class struggle. Soviet decisions to withdraw from Afghanistan, to cooperate in seeking a solution to southern African problems and to ratify and effectively verify the INF Treaty offer hope that Soviet international behavior will begin to match the General Secretary's words.

Similarly, we have seen an encouraging evolution in some aspects of Soviet human rights performance, although the situation is far from satisfactory. Emigration figures are up for Soviet Jews, Armenians, and ethnic Germans. A number of prisoners of conscience have been released. The number of bilateral hardship cases has been reduced. Mr. Gorbachev's policies of glasnost and democratization have given unofficial groups and human rights activists new latitude to express their concerns.

In Eastern Europe, the situation and prospects are unclear, as could have been expected from this extremely complex part of the world. Yet what happens in Eastern Europe could play a key role in determining the fate of reform in the Soviet Union. At present, there appear to be grounds for optimism.

The view that East European countries could be casually lumped together with the U.S.S.R. as a monolithic bloc of dictatorships is no longer valid. Though a monopoly of power by Communist parties and centrally planned economies are still characteristic of the region, there are important differences, both objective and subjective, among these countries as well as between them and the Soviet Union.

Objectively, for example, though market-oriented economic reform is clearly necessary in all these states, the urgency is greater in some—(for example Poland)—than in others—(for example the German Democratic Republic). On the subjective plane, whatever Mikhail Gorbachev's opinions may be, the East European leaders have their own priorities, concerns and perspectives on the need for radical change. They have responded very differently to local demands for reform—which vary widely in intensity and effectiveness from country to country—and to the challenge of Gorbachev's program of perestroika.

As a result, political and economic reform has reached different stages in the various countries of the region. At the bottom end of the spectrum is undoubtedly Romania which, correspondingly, has the worst human rights record. Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic have not followed Romania in totally abjuring reform but have done little to implement it, apart from adopting some of its rhetoric. People do not live in the same climate of fear as do the unfortunate Romanians, but the level of respect for human rights in these countries leaves a great deal to be desired. Most advanced in terms of political and economic reform are Poland and Hungary, where the overall human rights situation, though still far from fully satisfactory, has also greatly improved over the years.

Despite these differences, the general trend in the region offers hope of positive change. Even in those countries where economic reform has not yet made much headway, there is a growing recognition that only basic economic restructuring may avert further decline relative to the West, Japan and the rapidly developing states of Asia. There is also, especially in Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, an active opposition movement. Finally, the reformist Soviet General Secretary has signalled to East European leaders and peoples that Moscow is more willing than before to permit experimentation with political and economic change. In sum, pressures are building that will probably impel party leaderships to eventually loosen their grip on individual and group activities, even if such developments must await generational turnover at the top.

Two events are worth noting, as this session of the 100th Congress concludes: First, the Polish Communist Party is at last preparing to hold talks with Solidarity. We hope that these roundtable negotiations will lead to the institutionalization of opposition activity and societal influence on policymaking. Second, the man though to be responsible for formulating and implementing the Kremlin's more liberal policies toward Eastern Europe, Vadim Medvedev, has just become a member of the Soviet Politburo and holds the very important portfolio of ideology.

Both of these are hoepful signs in a period of transition. But we should always remember that our clearest landmarks in this uncharted wilderness are human rights. We will be better able to assess the meaning and significance of changes in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe by monitoring their compliance with the Helsinki Final Act. And the best way for us to promote reform in all the Warsaw Pact countries is to maintain our emphasis on human rights and to insist on their implementation of freely accepted obligations under the Helsinki Final Act.

Later this year the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe will make its first official trip to the Soviet Union to meet with Supreme Soviet delegates to discuss human rights matters. This Soviet initiative to establish a parliamentary human rights mechanism between our two countries is in itself an encouraging development that we hope will, in time, contribute significantly to the advancement of our humanitarian concerns.●

RETIREMENT OF RICHARD BARTON SMITH

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise with great pride today to honor a man who has served this body with distinction for 25 years. A native Tennessean, Scott County to be exact, Richard Barton Smith has worked long and hard in fulfilling his tasks in the U.S. Senate. Indeed, he has performed with extreme dedication to the Senate and to the State of Tennessee.

Dick Smith came to Washington in 1963 at the age of 25. He began his Senate career as an elevator operator after having been appointed by Senator Albert Gore, Sr. Shortly thereafter, he moved to the Senate post office, still under the appointment of the distinguished former Senator from Tennessee.

In 1972, Dick was hired by the Sergeant at Arms, Bob Dunphy, to be supervisor of the Equipment Division of the Senate's Service Department. He became Deputy Director of the Service Department in 1978. In the 10 years he spent in this department, his work was exemplary.

In 1982, Mr. President, I had the great pleasure to secure Dick's appointment at the Family and Staff Galleries in the Senate. In the last 6 years, while in this post, Dick has continued to be a credit to the Senate, the State of Tennessee and to me.

In all, Dick served under eight Sergeants at Arms during his 25 years in the Senate. He will be missed, but he leaves an example, of hard work and dedicated service that will live on as a model for the rest of us.

Mr. President, Dick is now returning to Tennessee, with his wife, Vivian, and his son, Richard, to live in the town of Oneida. There he tells me he plans to devote himself to the things that he has always wanted to do—going fishing with his son and spending more time on his hobby of woodworking. I understand he has brought a tractor and plans to have the best garden in Scott County. I wish him great luck and again express my thanks for his devoted service. I yield the floor.●

HABITAT FOR HUMANITY

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise this morning to call the Senate's attention to a very vital and worthy housing program—Habitat for Humanity. Habitat is an ecumenical Christian housing ministry. Its objective is to eliminate poverty housing and to make decent shelter a matter of conscience.

Mr. President, that is a very grand and noble objective. I am pleased to report that Habitat is making progress toward meeting that goal.

As we all know, America is facing a housing crisis. In particular, homelessness is becoming both a national epidemic and a national disgrace. According to the National Academy of Sciences, on any given night in the United States there are 100,000 children sleeping on the streets. And these are not runaways, these are families on the streets. Indeed, one-fifth of the homeless population are families and one-fifth is employed.

Mr. President, this dramatic increase in the number of homeless people is a direct result of the lack of affordable housing in America today.

Habitat for Humanity is one of the very best organizations in operation today that is fighting for affordable housing. In Tennessee and elsewhere, Habitat for Humanity has been instrumental in providing home ownership for low-income families. Indeed, there are over 200 affiliated projects in United States and Canadian cities and over 40 sponsored projects in 18 developing countries.

In Tennessee, Habitat has already built 50 homes, has another 18 presently under construction and has renovated 147 more.

Habitat organizes volunteers to build livable houses for low-income families at prices they can afford. Materials and labor are donated. And no-interest, no-profit loans are arranged.

Importantly, the low-income family is given the opportunity of home ownership, one of the cornerstones of American family life.

Mr. President, I wholeheartedly and enthusiastically endorse the efforts of Habitat for Humanity. This organization is making a monumental contribution in the fight for affordable housing. I yield the floor.●

THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on September 13, 1988, a gathering at the New York Public Library, one of the world's great research institutions, marked the occasion of the 75th anniversary of another remarkable institution—the Rockefeller Foundation. This occasion is most deserving of special note.

Established in 1913 by John D. Rockefeller, who, even before making his fortune in petroleum, understood the importance of sharing the blessings of life, the Rockefeller Foundation has been of invaluable public service to the people of this Nation, and indeed, to mankind. The spirit of philanthropy created by John D. Rockefeller's initial endowment of $35 million in Standard Oil stock certificates to the Rockefeller Foundation to "promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world" soon became the standard of comparison for all the foundations that followed.

The foundation is a unique combination of programs designed to meet human needs, heighten cultural awareness and increase international cooperation. A review of its history reveals support for a range of health, science, and education initiatives. Over the course of the last seven and one-half decades, the $1.8 billion disbursed to thousands of grantees worldwide has helped millions to overcome disease, famine, poverty, and the effects of war.

Notable successes abound. Such deadly killers as yellow fever, malaria, and hookworm were largely defeated, if not eliminated. Cooperative agricultural programs established in Asia, and throughout Central and South America enabled participating nations to develop more stable economies and feed their people. Fellowship programs in international studies, the humanities, social and natural sciences greatly expanded research opportunities and knowledge in these important areas of study. Ongoing support for public health training, education and research here in the United States, as well as abroad, helped to lay the foundation for modern medicine. Over 100 scholars and scientists supported by foundation funding have been awarded Nobel Prizes.

Rockefeller Foundation grants, large and small, have touched the lives of people all across this Nation, and will surely have a lasting effect on American higher learning and culture. Among the programs and projects from all over the country supported by foundation awards: the North Carolina Dance Theatre; the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center; academic development at Tuskegee Institute; a consortium of university presses organized to translate into English the works of Latin American writers; Karamu Playhouse in Cleveland; computer design and construction at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; studies of the Southwest conducted by the Texas State Historical Association; research at the University of Virginia for Dumas Malone's monumental biography of Thomas Jefferson; a theatre building at the University of Iowa; the Office of Population Research at Princeton University; the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund; productions of Shakespeare's plays produced by traveling companies in the State of Washington; an interdisciplinary graduate program in women's studies at Sarah Lawrence College; pioneering collaborative research in biology and chemistry at the California Institute of Technology; and a University of Wisconsin study of the State's development. And these are just to name a few!

At the celebration of the foundation's 75th anniversary, David Rockefeller, grandson of John D. Rockefeller, toasted the foundation's ideals and its accomplishments; and the new foundation president, Peter C. Goldmark, Jr., looked forward to the next century.

Through most of the years of the foundation's existence, members of each generation of the Rockefeller family have been involved: John D. Rockefeller, Jr., served as chairman of the board of trustees of the foundation from 1917 to 1940; John D. Rockefeller III, from 1952 to 1971 and John D. Rockefeller IV (now the distinguished Senator from West Virginia) as a trustee from 1968 to 1977 and from 1978 to 1981.

Mr. President, I should like at this point in the Record to include the text of the remarks offered by David Rockefeller and Peter C. Goldmark, Jr. at the Rockefeller Foundation's 75 anniversary celebration, held on September 13, 1988, at the New York Public Library.

The remarks follow:

TOAST BY DAVID ROCKEFELLER TO THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION ON THE OCCASION OF ITS 75TH ANNIVERSARY

THE FIRST CHARITABLE TRUST

75 years ago at the age of 74, my grandfather, John D. Rockefeller, gave $35 million in Standard Oil stock certificates that provided the initial endowment for the Rockefeller foundation and enabled it to pursue its stated purpose: "To promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world." This act brought into being an entirely new kind of organization, the charitable trust, which was virtually unknown at the time. Its only significant precursors were the Russell Sage Foundation and the Carnegie Corporation and his own earlier efforts at modern philanthropy. Nothing else like them had ever existed before.

Even at the time of the creation of the Rockefeller Foundation, however, the idea of charitable giving was hardly new to my grandfather. As a child his mother had instructed him in his religious duty to give 10% of his income to charity. The famous "Ledger A", now held at the Rockefeller Archive Center, bears witness to the thoroughness of his training. As a teenager, earning only a few dollars a week as a clerk in a commission merchant's business, he gave generously and regularly.

GUIDING PRINCIPLES

His later success as the creator of the American petroleum industry—which was, in many ways, at the heart of this nation's rapid industrial expansion based on cheap energy—never caused him to forget his early training. Instead, as his ability to give increased, he simply increased his giving, often exceeding the biblical injunction to tithe by a significant amount. But, my grandfather also believed strongly that there had to be more to philanthropy than simply giving money. And, to this end, he applied to this field the same principles that he had learned in business—the need to organize carefully and to surround oneself with exceedingly able people. These principles helped to transform charity into modern, systematic, philanthropy. And here, one name stands out above all the rest—Dr. Frederick T. Gates.

PIONEERING ENDEAVORS

By 1913, Grandfather had already established a number of impressive institutions: He had worked with William Rainey Harper to found the University of Chicago. He had created the Rockefeller Institute with Drs. Robert H. Welch and Simon Flexner. He had established the General Education Board with Wallace Buttrick and Wickliffe Rose. Each of these institutions were pioneering endeavors and each made impressive contributions. Most of them continue to play an influential role in our society to this day.

A RELISH FOR LIFE

On a more personal note, I think that perhaps I may be the only one here tonight who knew John D. Rockefeller over a period of years with any degree of intimacy. It is true, of course, that Grandfather represented very different things to different people. At the time he created the Foundation, he was being pilloried in the press and was hated by many who decried his successful, but sometimes ruthless tactics, in creating Standard Oil. On the other hand, I knew him during the last 21 years of his life as a tender and loving grandfather who relished life, enjoyed meeting people and encouraged his grandchildren to visit him. He had an endearing, if rather simple, sense of humor and adopted the rather practice of giving dimes as a means of establishing contact with people he would otherwise not have had a chance to meet.

A LEGACY OF ENDURING VALUE

This evening we happily celebrate the first 75 years of the Rockefeller Foundation—75 years of pioneering in modern philanthropy—years of impressive and enduring achievement. My father, John D. Rockefeller, and my oldest brother, John D. Rockefeller 3rd, who served as Chairmen for much of this time, helped to build a legacy of enduring value.

The Foundation has been exceptional in many ways, but certain of its characteristics seem particularly notable to me. First, from the beginning it had a global perspective. Second, it has always been concerned with fundamental issues affecting all of mankind, public health, hunger and the intricate problems of food production, and the insistent and pernicious problem of world population growth. Finally, the Foundation has always recognized that superior achievement in whatever field depends on the nurturing of superior people. Foundation Fellows, drawn from all corners of the world, are still remembered and are still making an important contribution.

CHALLENGES AND OPPORTUNITIES

The challenges and opportunities facing the world today are very different from those of 75 years ago. What has not changed is the need for vision, leadership and a willingness to take risks. There is every reason to believe that those most recently selected to chart its course into the future possess precisely those essential qualities. I am confident that in continuing to carry out the Founder's charge "to promote the well-being of mankind", the new leadership will take into account both the lessons of the past and the imperative to create a "new" philanthropy that reflects the stark realities of poverty, hunger, and accelerating technological change in the world today. In so doing may the Foundation find ways to cooperate with like-minded public and private groups throughout the world so as to leverage its resources and create the effective partnerships needed to produce the sustainable economic growth required to address the staggering problems before us.

With these thoughts in mind, I suggest that we rise and drink a toast to the creativity of the man who brought the Rockefeller Foundation into being, to the dedication and effective leadership of those who managed its affairs so well over the last 75 years, and to those who will guide the Foundation towards a bright and equally productive future.

REMARKS OF PETER C. GOLDMARK, JR., ON THE OCCASION OF THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION'S 75TH ANNIVERSARY

A VERY GOOD YEAR

As the song says, it was a very good year. 1913 was, in fact, a hell of a year.

Some fundamental features of our landscape made their appearance: the assembly line at Ford Motor Company; the income tax; the Federal Reserve System.

Some new products: Camel cigarettes, Brillo, Lifesavers. And the first Indian head/buffalo nickel.

And 1913 saw the opening of Grand Central Station—one of two great New York landmarks which shared 1913 as their birth year with the Rockefeller Foundation. Can you remember what the other one was?

In March, 1913, 5,000 women marched down Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington DC for the right to vote. Crowds of men lined the route and hit them, spit on them, and burned them with lighted cigars.

1913 also saw the appearance in this country of an institution with which more of you in this room come in contact more often than any other I have mentioned tonight—and one which has had zero impact on the course of history: the crossword puzzle.

Are some of you still puzzling over the other great New York landmark that was born in 1913 along with Grand Central Station and the Rockefeller Foundation? It is gone now, that's why you are having trouble thinking of it.

It was a great one—as close to the heart and the spirit of this wonderful city as any will ever be: Ebbets Field. And in the outfield of the team that played in Ebbets Field for the first time that year was a man who, so far as I know, was never considered for membership on the Rockefeller Foundation's Board of Trustees, although he had one of the greatest minds of his time: Charles Casey Stengel.

THE AMERICAN FOUNDATION

The American Foundation is a curious beast. It is as out of place as a meteor crater in the middle of the Great Plains, as distinctive as a coelacanth at the bottom of the Indian Ocean. A foundation is defined not by what it does, whom it serves, or what it builds, but by what it chooses to be.

A foundation must engage in a most bizarre alchemy. It must start with a material which is totally inert, totally dead—money. And it must turn it into something: A building, an education, a program, an institute, a hope. It must turn the inert money into something. That is the philanthropic imperative; that is its trust.

We salute this evening the Rockefeller Foundation—and organization which has engaged in that curious alchemy for 75 years. The salute comes this evening from those who have benefitted from that alchemy; those who have witnessed the movements, changes and achievements it has fueled; those who have managed it; and by all of us who worrry a little about where we on this planet may find ourselves in the years ahead.

TWO VIEWS OF THE WORLD

How we view that planet—that world—is important. For many of us that view is changing.

Let me tell you a wonderful story of how two different people viewed the world.

Bertrand Russell, the British philosopher, was once giving a public lecture on astronomy (not astrology, astronomy). He explained how the moon was revolving around the earth, how the earth was revolving around the sun, how the sun was racing through our galaxy, how our galaxy was spinning amoung the other galaxies—it was exciting stuff.

At the end, a little old lady in the back of the room stood up and said, "Russell, what you've told us is interesting but it's absolute rubbish! Everyone knows that the world is a flat plane supported on the back of a giant tortoise."

Russell paused, smiled a slightly superior smile, and asked, "And then, madam, on what does the tortoise stand?"

The little old lady shot back, "You're clever young man, very clever, but it's turtles all the way down!"

THE YEARS AHEAD: A VERY LONG WAY TO GO

Our view of the world will continue to change in the years ahead. I believe the years ahead will try us and our children beyond our most troubled apprehensions.

How can I make real for you how far we have to go?

Come with me to a hospital in one of our large cities.

A nurse holds a tiny baby in front of us. The baby is in a closed container. It has needles and tubes sticking out all over it. Millions of dollars of research went into the techniques which keep this baby alive.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars were poured into the education of the medical personnel who treat her.

Tens of millions were invested in the equipment and facilities of the hospital.

Look again at the child.

She is very small, unnaturally small; she was born three months early.

She is the child of a 15-year-old mother.

The baby is addicted to cocaine.

How much and how well have we invested in that baby's past—or future?

We have a very long way to go. We have much to do here—at home, in our own country. We will not forget that. We will choose to be defined in part by our willingness to address the toughest problems here at home.

How can we make real for ourselves how much has changed in the world as a whole?

FUNDAMENTAL CHANGES IN HUMAN CAPACITY

Within the lifespan of most of the people in this room four fundamental changes in human capacity have taken place. Any single one of them taken alone would have been momentous enough, in prior history, to have an age or an era named after it. But in your and my lifetime, as Jean Mayer points out, there have been four:

We have developed the capacity to manipulate volumes of information undreamt of in human history. Billions and trillions of pieces of information can be gathered, read, scanned and recombined in fractions of a second.

We are developing the capacity to manipulate genetic structures—becoming, for better or worse, the master of evolution rather than its subject.

We have jumped into nuclear age where men's ability to loose destruction upon one another has escalated beyond anything imagined by the warriors and rulers of the past.

And, of course, we have at last realized one of the very oldest of human aspirations, a dream which has existed for as long as man has written and sung about himself: we have learned to escape the gravity of the earth.

THREE ULTIMATA

With these changes and the historical period they both triggered and epitomize, humankind as a species—as a race—now faces for the first time three ultimata.

The first is that we must develop institutions and patterns of cooperation which will allow us to avoid blowing ourselves up.

The inherent problem here—controlling access to and use of superordinate destructiveness—is essentially with us for good now. And it will not for long be limited to nuclear weapons. But the probelm of possession and proliferation of nuclear weapons is immediate and formidable.

Second, we must understand and reverse the destruction we are wreaking upon the biosphere. The place where life on this planet occurs is a very fragile, very oddly-shaped space. It is an extremely thin layer about 20 miles deep—10-15 mi. above sea level, and 5 mi. below. It is in fact a very thin film wrapped around the earth. If the thickness of this film—15-20 mi.—were traced on a schoolroom globe, it would appear as a thin pencil line. We do not know what we are doing to this biofilm—its composition, its temperature, its hydro- and atmo-dynamics. But there is little reason to think that what we are doing is good.

Wallace S. Broecker, a geochemist at Columbia, puts it this way: "The inhabitants of planet earth are quietly conducting a gigantic environmental experiment. So vast and so sweeping will be the consequences that, were it brought before any responsible council for approval, it would be firmly rejected. Yet it goes on with little interference from any jurisdiction or nation."

The third ultimatum is to find a balance among food production, family size and wealth. This goal was once considered optional—worthy, desirable, ethical, and certainly smart foreign policy for the richer nations, but nevertheless in the final analysis, discretionary.

Now it is a required goal. It is required to minimize warfare, because warfare has become increasingly dangerous. It is required to preserve the biofilm. Most fundamentally, it is required to provide realistic hope for progress and sufficiency as the only conceivable incentive for people to cooperate, to sacrifice, and to modify traditions in the ways that will be necessary. The haves must understand this if they are to save some of what they have. The have nots must realistically expect that they can get a fair share of what they do not have.

COMMON VALUES

This is the job we have to tacke. All of us. Not just foundations. Not just Americans. All of us . . . all of us on the globe. And we will have to do it within a unitary global context. It will have to be conceived and seen through a single prism: that of one world with one future. Action will have to meet one test: does it help build a regime of transnational cooperation, And institutions will have to reflect a common set of values: tolerance, diversity, non-destructiveness.

Who are we that sit here tonight and talk of these things? Of ultimate? Of global values? Of forces and threats which will shape or lives? Of cooperation with people we do not know and may never meet, With some we have been conditioned to hate, Who are we?

We are not representative of the world's 5 billion people. We—and a few like us around the globe—are fortunate to a degree practically unimaginable to the other 5 billion.

A LARGE DEGREE OF CHOICE

But the most valuable thing we have in our lives—more valuable than our education, our economic self-sufficiency, our relative ease—the most valuable and astonishing thing we have is choice. It is our good fortune to have a large degree of choice in our lives—choice in what we eat, what we do, where we go; choice in what we learn, how we spend our resources; choice in what we hope, what we dream, what we dare.

In a very real sense what we honor here tonight is the choice exercised by one individual of extraordinary talent and wealth 75 years ago—an individual who in that act drew upon the better part of himself.

We honor this foundation and all foundations as places where choice can be exercised for the good.

And we, too, call upon the better parts of ourselves—the only parts which can take us successfully through the next difficult period which it is our task and our lot to cross.

ANOTHER GENERATION

The foundation we salute tonight, like so many other institutions in this country, lies now in the hands of an American generation which three times challenged the generation before them.

When this generation acted outside the then law of the land on behalf of civil rights, they were told "no"—that is too dangerous, you are going too fast.

When they questioned the war in Vietnam, they were told "no"—that is wrong, unpatriotic and divisive.

When they challenged the destruction of the environment, they were told "no"—you are exaggerating, and you will jeopardize economic progress.

And there were others of the same generation or spirit in other cities, other streets, other lands. There were those who followed Gandhi or Mandela, as well as those who followed Martin Luther King. There were those who questioned and challenged—in Manila, in Budapest, in Prague and in Soweto, as well as at Kent State.

Why recall this tonight?

To remind ourselves to listen with care and with moral imagination lest we say "no" to the dreams of another generation or shut the voice of another part of the world.

To pledge to each other on this anniversary that we carry forward the work of this foundation not to celebrate what already exists, but to essay what is required for the future.

AIM HIGH, DARE GREATLY, AND WORK HARD

And to remember that the most important and lasting accomplishments of this foundation and of all human institutions come when we aim high, dare greatly, and work hard. These are the true fundamentals.

Because about the rest we cannot be certain.

We may not—will not—always choose will. We will not always organize effectively. We may not, despite our best efforts, understand clearly the consequences of what we undertake.

We will have to aim high, dare greatly and work hard. To do these things, with tolerance, will be the only hope of success and the only guarantee of integrity. To find the road through immense dangers and problems we will have to find and draw upon the best in ourselves, in order to work with others and to build new institutions.

"Rien n'est possible sans les hommes, rien n'est durable sans les institutions."

Those are the words of one of the great world citizens of this century.

"Nothing is feasible without humans; nothing is durable without institutions." wrote Jean Monnet.

This year is the 100th anniversary of Jean Monnet's birth in Cognac . . . by birth in Cognac, I refer to a place in France . . . not to a modern French method of natural childbirth.

We are a species used to counting its history in centuries or millenia. A species which speaks of ages. Whose leaders—like the man who created this foundation—whose sculptors, whose architects and statesmen intended that their achievements would last hundreds or thousand of years.

Now we see that the years likely to be left us to do what we have to do are fewer than we could ever have thought. Today we live in a world where these complex ultimata must be negotiated among all of us. Tonight we understand that each decade of survival will depend in part—upon luck.

We have a past marked by recurring rivalries and awful slaughter. How shall we transcend that?

We share a history which seems to spawn senseless contention and cruel intolerance. How shall we be different?

The verse of T.S. Eliot, whose 100th anniversary we observe this year, reminds us that from the grave our feverish divisions may look less important:

These men, and those who opposed them
And those whom they opposed
Accept the constitution of silence
And are folded in a single party.

We start with the paradox which is our particular opportunity: as a race we have no choice but to start to think differently, act differently, be different; as individuals you and I have great choice in our lives. We start by exercising that choice. We start in the way that humans always start their most difficult, uncertain enterprises: by starting.

TAKING ON THE IMPOSSIBLE

Now if that doesn't do it for you . . . if that doesn't put you in a mind to take on the impossible, I offer an insight even more profound and compelling.

From one of the indisputably great minds of our century.

Remember?

The man who first appeared in the outfield at Ebbets Field in 1913, the year this foundation was established.

Later, when he became a manager . . . Casey introduced the two platoon system to baseball. He had all right-handed hitters facing left-handed pitchers and vice versa. No one had ever thought of this before.

But the sportswriters all though it would never work.

After the game on the first day he did it, the reporters gathered around Casey at the dugout.

"This'll never work—this is impossible," they said. "This won't work."

Casey looked up and said: "You know, a lot of people say these things are impossible. But in the long run, that doesn't work."●

UPDATE ON EFFORT TO IMPROVE MEDICARE'S MENTAL HEALTH BENEFIT

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased to take this opportunity to advise my colleagues of new cost data prepared by the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] that could further pave the way for Medicare beneficiaries to obtain greater access to mental health services across the country.

I should note that 22 of my distinguished colleagues, including 5 who serve on the Finance Committee, are cosponsors of S. 123, legislation I have introduced to recognize psychologists as providers of mental health services under the Medicare Program. This long-overdue legislation has received increasing support over the 100th Congress, and is complementary to the recent action taken by Congress to improve Medicare's coverage of mental health through an increase in the mental health benefit. Many members of Congress share my view that making psychologists directly available to Medicare beneficiaries is good health policy. Moreover, it addresses the fact that many mentally ill elderly will not be able to use the increased mental health benefit we have approved because they do not have access to a qualified health provider.

Last December, during the Finance Committee's deliberations on the budget reconciliation bill, a provision seeking to grant psychologists direct reimbursement under Medicare was moved forward by my distinguished colleague from West Virginia, Senator JAY ROCKEFELLER, and received bipartisan support from many other committee members for possible inclusion in the final budget package. Many of us believe that the provision could be law today if it were not for the very steep cost estimate first associated with the provision.

Since that time, Senator ROCKEFELLER and Representative WILLIAM COYNE asked the Congressional Budget Office to examine the proposal in greater detail and to prepare an up-to-date cost estimate. We now have a preliminary CBO estimate which projects that allowing patients direct access to psychologist-provided services would cost only $10 million in startup costs in fiscal year 1989, $15 million in fiscal year 1990, $20 million in fiscal year 1991, $25 million in fiscal year 1992, and $25 million in fiscal year 1993. These figures are dramatically lower than the projection offered verbally last December to the Finance Committee. What we have is a proposal that would cost an average of 0.04 percent per year of total part B expenditures over a 4-year period from 1990 through 1993. The serious unmet mental health needs of our Nation's elderly surely justify this relatively small increase in Medicare expenditures to improve the availability of mental health care.

Mental health care has dramatically changed and improved since the inception of Medicare over 20 years ago. I ask my colleagues to recognize these changes, including the very major role psychologists now play in the delivery of quality mental health treatment and join me in supporting S. 123.

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I rise to thank my distinguished colleague, Senator INOUYE, for sharing this very important information and updating our fellow Members on the mental health delivery system within Medicare. Senator INOUYE has been a true leader in the fight to improve mental health care and the availability of psychological services over his many years in Congress, and I am both pleased and honored to share his goals and work with him so closely.

I, too, believe that Congress should act to conform Medicare with the mental health needs of beneficiaries and current, accepted mental health policy. It was only last year that Congress modified Medicare's mental health benefit for the first time since the inception of this vital national program. With the exception of legislation passed last December authorizing Medicare reimbursement for services provided by psychologists who see patients without physician supervision in community mental health centers and rural health clinics, we have still not altered Medicare to recognize the role that providers such as psychologists play in the delivery of mental health care in our country today. In addition, and this does not pertain to Medicare alone, we need to give more serious attention to the various new, innovative, and cost-effective treatment settings that are commonly used in other public programs and in the private sector to deliver mental health care.

I am extremely pleased with the recent developments that show growing support for psychologists' inclusion in Medicare, and am especially heartened by the new cost data available from CBO. There should be no doubt in anyone's mind that this is a minimal investment that will have tremendous return in the alleviation of mental and emotional suffering of our Nation's elderly. I am strongly committed to the goal of making mental health care services more available to the disabled and elderly beneficiaries of Medicare, and believe S. 123 offers one significant solution toward improving the delivery of mental health care in this country. I ask my colleagues to review this new information and join me and the other Members of the Senate who already support this legislation to secure its passage.●

THE PHILIPPINES BASES NEGOTIATIONS

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, negotiations between the United States and the Philippines on the future of United States bases in that country have reached a critical stage. The success or failure of these negotiations will depend on whether or not a formula can be agreed upon whereby $100 million in United States Treasury bonds will be made available to the Philippines for each of the next 2 years.

Few would disagree that Clark Air Force Base and Subic Bay Naval Base in the Philippines are two of the most strategic military assets we have anywhere in the world.

In an Op-Ed piece which appeared in the Washington Post on September 21, 1988, Filipino Foreign Minister, Raul Manglapus, laid out very cogent arguments in support of a reasonable base compensation package.

As the Foreign Minister correctly pointed out, the major mission requirement of our bases in the Philippines is to guarantee access to the critical ocean passages between the Pacific and Indian Ocean and the protection of Japan's sea lines of communication. United States security interests from the Republic of Korea in the Far East to the Persian Gulf in the Middle East will be affected by our ability to maintain a continued presence in the Philippines.

In light of the importance of the bases to the United States, I do not believe the Government of the Philippines is taking an unreasonable position. The United States rightfully gives Israel and Egypt $5 billion a year. Pakistan, a non-United States base country, received $608 million in assistance from the United States this year alone.

As the Foreign Minister pointed out, for 33 years after the United States signed a Military Bases Agreement with the Philippines in 1947, compensation was not provided for these bases. Manglapus notes that:

> * * * when at last compensation was allowed in 1980, it was considerably less in absolute as well as relative terms than that given in other host countries, considering the much farther-ranging responsibilities assigned to the Philippine facilities in the U.S. global strategy.

Mr. President, in the aftermath of World War II, we launched the Marshall plan to rebuild Western Europe. Japan was a major beneficiary of that program as well. We believed a strong Western Europe and Japan, economically, was the best bulwark against communism we could have in the West and the East.

Yet, the Philippines suffered as much, if not more, from the ravages of World War II. They deserved then to have been the beneficiary of a Marshall plan type program, particularly in light of the relationship we had enjoyed with that country since the turn of the century. Unfortunately, we did not respond to the needs of the Philippines then. Had we done so, the Filipino people might not be facing the social and economic crisis they are today.

After years of giving support to the dictatorship of Ferdinand Marcos, the United States has a particular obligation to the Philippines to do all we can to see that democracy does not fail this time around. Marcos left the Philippines virtually bankrupt, with a foreign debt of $28 billion. He as able to do so in no small part to the support we gave him for so many years.

Thus, it is imperative that we do all we can to agree to a compensation package for the Philippines that is both fair and recognizes the true value of the bases to our strategic interests. The Filipino Government has the right to expect compensation commensurate with the worth of these bases.

I ask that the Op-Ed piece written by Raul Manglapus be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

BLAMING THE PHILIPPINES

(By Raul S. Manglapus)

At a moment when chances have brightened for a settlement of the various issues in the current five-year review of U.S.-Philippine military bases, Jeane Kirkpatrick's op-ed [Sept. 19] is particularly ill-timed. It also shows a lack of information.

It was the United States, not the Philippines, that suggested in 1979 that every five years there shall "be begun and completed a complete and thorough review and assessment of the agreement including its objectives, its provisions, its duration and the manner of implementation, to assure that the agreement continues to serve the mutual benefit of both parties."

I am not in Washington now "to work with Congress on the mini-Marshall Plan immediately following a stormy session with U.S. Ambassador Nicholas Platt." It was during a most cordial session of our panel talks that Ambassador Platt suggested, when he learned of my going to the U.N. General Assembly, that I come to Washington to talk to U.S. leaders about the bases.

When Secretary of State George Shultz came to Manila last June, he and I agreed that the "hard components" (cash and commodities) of the U.S.-Philippine proposals for compensation were not far apart from each other. We both agreed that both sides would explore "creative" ways of raising the compensation to the level President Aquino would find acceptable and useful if she should opt affirmatively for the continuance of our military relationship and therefore needed an impressive package with which to overcome anticipated domestic opposition.

Kirkpatrick perpetuates the condescension that the United States is in the Philippines only to protect the Philippines and therefore it is ungrateful of the Filipinos to demand better terms (even if it is the United States that originally suggested the periodic review).

U.S. experts and policy makers say otherwise. The U.S. Congressional Research Service says that "a major mission requirement for the bases is to guarantee access to the major passages between the Pacific and the Indian Ocean and protection of Japan's Sea Lines of Communication (SLOCs)."

The studies in this respect stress "American and Japanese interests in the Persian Gulf" and only "to a lesser extent" locations in Southeast Asia and the Indian Ocean. "This specifically involves protection of Japan's SLOCs to its major sources of energy and other vital raw materials: the Middle East, Indonesia, and Australia," the report continues.

Out of these requirements emerges the global significance of the bases for U.S. strategy. Secretary Shultz, after speaking of the role of the bases in Philippine defense, stressed (in a speech in July) the "large strategic involvement of the Philippines," which "is global in nature."

Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs Gaston Sigur speaks in Senate testimony of U.S. security commitments to Korea, Japan, Thailand and important national interests in the Persian Gulf, for all of which "the geostrategic location of the Philippines is unsurpassed."

In contrast, the mission requirements for U.S. bases in other locations are relatively modest. Yet, the conditions of each of the basing agreements in these instances are far more favorable to the host countries than those in the Philippine Agreement, including questions of criminal jurisdiction over offending U.S. servicemen, ownership of improvements, status of forces and compensation.

While those host countries were paid compensation by the United States from the very inception of the military facilities, the facilities in the Philippines went without compensation for 33 years after the 1947 Military Bases Agreement was signed. And when at last compensation was allowed in 1980, it was considerably less in absolute as well as relative terms than that given other host countries, considering the much farther-ranging responsibilities assigned to the Philippine facilities in U.S. global strategy.

The compensation of $100 million in 1980 and $180 million in 1985 is even less impressive when placed beside the more than $5 billion given annually to Israel and Egypt, which host no bases but which are expected not to war on each other and to keep the peace in the Middle East—a somewhat more vague mission than the precise transoceanic and transcontinental reach of Clark and Subic.

U.S. experts have also estimated the cost of replacing Subic and Clark. When one such expert suggests that the replacement "might require four to six additional navy battle groups which would cost upwards from $60 billion" (Congressional Research Service, 1986), that is called a scientific study. But when a Filipino cites the study, it is called brinkmanship.

At the conclusion of her piece, Jeane Kirkpatrick, perhaps unwittingly, proves a point that President Aquino has been seeking to make without much success. At the ASEAN summit last December the president reminded her fellow heads of government that "the Philippine factor is said to have contributed to the securing of air space and sea lanes that are vital to the continued economic stability and growth of our neighbors in South East Asia, East Asia and the Pacific."

It was a diplomatically disguised invitation for all to join in the political responsibility for U.S. bases and rescue the Philippines from the divisive and polarizing domestic issue of being the lone bases host in Southeast Asia. Nobody paid heed. Now Jeane Kirkpatrick is suggesting exactly the same thing. Bully for her.

But if that doesn't work—who is ungrateful? Not our country, which hosts the bases and, unlike the many U.S. allies in Western Europe and Northeast Asia, exposes itself alone in our region for the global strategy of the United States.●

AUGUST TRADE DEFICIT

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today we received some bad news on trade. The merchandise trade deficit for August grew by $2.7 billion to almost $12.2 billion. Exports grew by $1 billion but imports increased by $3.7 billion.

There are those, especially in the administration, who would claim that this shows progress. Based on the data from the first 8 months of this year, the deficit will be about $140 billion for this year, compared with a record $170 billion deficit last year.

If this is success, it is very limited success indeed. True, this year's deficit will be below the last year's record level. But, as the last few months show, and August's figures reemphasize, the improvement in our trade deficit has stopped. All of the decline in the deficit occurred in the first 5 months of the year. Since then, the trend has been upward again.

It is clear what has happened. We have had a massive depreciation in the value of the dollar. That has brought our trade defict down a little bit—mostly by expanding exports. But that stimulus has run its course. Unless we do more, our trade deficit will remain stuck at $140 billion per year.

We must continue to reduce the trade deficit, not be complacent about a one time drop caused by a massive devaluation of the dollar. This administration has gone directly from pretending our trade problems do not exist to pretending that they are already solved—without ever stopping to seriously consider the problem.

One of the reasons our continuing trade imbalance is the rapid rise of imports. The depreciation of the dollar, while stimulating exports, has done little to slow imports, which have grown over 26 percent over the past 2 years—has been almost three times faster than our overall rate of growth. Imports have increased in almost every category of product.

One of the most important components of our imports is oil. The volume of crude oil imports for the first 8 months of this year are up over 9 percent compared to the same period last year. Only the recent softness of oil prices has prevented our trade deficit in dollar terms from being even worse. At last year's oil prices, our trade deficit would have been over $3.5 billion higher. In other words, almost 12 percent of the improvement in our trade deficit over last year was due simply to the fall in the price of oil.

Mr. President, today's trade figures show the need for an effective trade policy. Passage of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act this year was a step in that direction. However, it is clear that until we have an energy policy, we will not have an effective trade policy. I hope the next President, whoever he is, will work with the Congress to craft an energy policy to improve our national security and reduce our trade deficit.●

THOMAS R. BOHRER

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to honor an Olympic medal winner from my home of Long Island, NY. Thomas R. Bohrer, a neighbor from Babylon, NY, was a member of the American four-man without coxswain rowing team in the recent summer Olympics in Seoul, South Korea. With a winning time of 6:06.22, Mr. Bohrer and his three teammates won the Silver Medal.

A "welcome home" ceremony and parade are planned this weekend in Babylon in honor of Thomas Bohrer. I had hoped to attend these festivities, but unfortunately a prior commitment prevents that. But I would like to send my personal congratulations to Mr. Bohrer for this most outstanding achievement. His dedication and years of training and hard work are admirable. I am proud to be the neighbor of one of the few New York Olympic medal winners.

I would also like to commend the town of Babylon for helping to send one of its own to the Olympics. They played a major role in the effort to send Thomas Bohrer to Seoul.

I send my personal congratulations to Thomas Bohrer and to all the American Olympic athletes. They should know that, regardless of the medal count, America knows they are all winners.●

NATIONAL BUSINESS WOMEN'S WEEK AND WOMAN OF THE YEAR

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize National Business Women's Week and in particular, to salute Dewella Dobson, named "Woman of the Year" by the Business and Professional Women's Club of Buffalo.

I would like to acknowledge America's debt to business and professional women everywhere during the week of October 16–22. I salute the progress, achievements and sacrifices made by America's business women. I would like to extend my own special and admiring recognition to the Business and Professional Women's Club of Buffalo.

The club has several events planned for 1988's National Business Women's Week, including the naming of a "Woman of the Year." This year's winner is Dewella Dobson, of Williamsville, NY. For the past 14 years, Ms. Dobson has been an active member of the club, serving as president on the club's local level, and serving on the district and State levels as well. Ms. Dobson is employed by the Computer Task Group, Inc. in Buffalo as a marketing research assistant. Active in community activities, Ms. Dobson also has been involved in the United Way and the Buffalo Red Cross.

I salute Ms. Dobson and her achievement, and send my congratulations to her on being named "Woman of the Year." I send my best wishes to the Business and Professional Women's Club of Buffalo, and the club's chapters everywhere, and urge my colleagues to observe and commend National Business Women's Week.●

PERU'S ANTINARCOTIC EFFORT

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, recently there was an encouraging development from the front in the war on drugs. The Government of Peru has announced a 3-year, antinarcotics program to combat illegal coca cultivation and associated cocaine manufacturing and trafficking. Since Peru is the source country where most of the world's coca is grown, this is a welcome development. Peru's task is complicated by two dangerous Communist insurgencies that have growing ties to well armed traffickers the Government plans to confront. In addition, coca cultivation is 10 times more profitable for Peru's impoverished farmers than any other crop.

In view of these facts, I wish to share with my colleagues a letter from Ambassador Atala to Chairman DANTE FASCELL, in addition to a fact sheet prepared by the Embassy.

The material follows:

EMBASSY OF PERU,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1988.

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Affairs, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN FASCELL: I am pleased to address this letter to you to express the appreciation of the Government of Peru for the significant efforts being promoted by U.S. Congress and particularly by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives under your leadership, in order to strengthen the fight against international narcotics trafficking.

In the context of the Peruvian Government's permanent struggle against drugs, President Alan Garcia has recently approved a three year program (1988–1990) with the objective of dealing effectively with the drug problem in our country. Said program stresses the urgency for international cooperation with Peru in order to improve and implement an efficient plan for the eradication of illicit coca leaf production and interdiction activities.

The program above-mentioned involves three different areas in which the efforts of the Peruvian Government will be focused:

1. Interdiction operations in Northeastern Peru,

2. Providing Security for the activities of the coca eradication program and,

3. Durg use prevention.

The estimated cost of this program is US$345'193,225. The Government of Peru will dedicate US$215'723,125 and would seek international financing for the additional amount of US$129'470,100.

Such program seeks to improve the efficiency and technical capabilities of the Police Force (Guardia Civil) which is responsible for developing interdiction operations. Also, it underlines the need to create technical facilities not only in the Upper Huallaga Valley but in the Eastern region in Peru and to seek modern transport and communication equipment.

Within the framework of current limited resources and a climate of violence due to drug traffickers and terrorist groups, my Government is making a significant progress in developing a global strategy to face the drug problem. There were 676 hectares eradicated between January and June 1988, surpassing the 172 hectares eradicated through the same period last year.

Presidente Alan Garcia has stated the willingness of the Peruvian Government to have a high ranking Delegation come to United States to discuss with United States officials an Action Plan in this regard.

Since the U.S. House of Representatives is considering the approval of the "Omnibus Drug Bill" this week, I would like to assure you that the Government of Peru recognizes that much more has to be done. But it also considers that the magnitude of the technical, human and financial resources needed to fight adequately this scourge in my country should be fairly understood in order to encourage a full cooperation between Peru and the United States.

I avail this opportunity to renew to you the assurances of my high consideration.

CESAR G. ATALA,
Ambassador.

FACTSHEET ON PERU'S 1988-90 ANTI-NARCOTICS EFFORT

Recently, the government of Peru committed itself to a three year plan to achieve three separate objectives in its war against cocaine traffickers. These are enhanced interdiction powers and cocaine seizures; (2) substantial increases in coca acreage eradicated; and (3) expanded campaigns to convince citizens not to grow or consume cocaine.

Under this program, the government will build sixteen new bases strategically located in major coca growing regions. Manning these bases will be 25,000 newly hired members of the Civil Guard, a 615-percent increase in the number of personnel assigned. Proportionate to the population of the U.S., this is the equivalent of hiring 300,000 additional DEA agents.

These dramatic steps are being taken in view of the following facts:

1 million out of 20 million in Peru are involved in growing coca;

Coca is grown on 180,000 hectares but only 10,000 hectares is needed to meet legal and traditional Indian demand;

Coca production is concentrated in inaccessible eastern mountain and jungle areas far from major population centers or existing military bases and is largely outside the political control of the government;

After partial processing, illegal coca is flown out of Peru to the north or east, using flight paths across the least populated areas of Peru, from an estimated 100 different hidden clandestine airstrips; a smaller amount is shipped by river into Colombia along the Amazon;

Traffickers are well armed and have growing ties to the rural communist murderous Maoist insurgents known as the Shining Path;

One-third of these incarcerated in Peru have been jailed for narcotics offenses; and

Peru is a poor country and illegal coca growing is enormously profitable.

Under the government's plan, eight new bases will be established in the center of coca growing in Peru, the Upper Huallaga Valley located east of the Andes. Another five will be established in the second largest growing area in east central Peru where the Ene, Urubamba, Tambopata, and Apurimac rivers merge. Another base will be built at Caballococha where the Amazon passes into Colombia. And the final two will be built in the southern portion of Labuyeque provence in the Andes.

From these bases, the Civil Guard will mount interdiction and eradication raids. Their objectives will be to eradicate 10% or 18,000 hectares of coca production, to capture harvested coca plants and manufactured cocaine paste, to locate and destroy hidden airstrips, and to interdict waterborne cocaine traffic. The Civil Guard will also be talking with Peruvian peasants to prevent the number of growers or cocaine consumers from increasing.

The estimated cost of this three year plan is $345 million. Of this amount, Peru is willing to provide $215 million. Peru believes the remaining $130 million should come from foreign sources. In terms of a division of labor, Peru will supply the manpower and the funds to pay them. However, it lacks the technical equipment, such as helicopters and night vision binoculars, that are necessary to carry out the multilateral initiative.

Since it is the demand for cocaine in developed countries that is the cause of tremendous profitability trafficking produces—street prices are thirty times what Peru's peasants receive—, the government believes that foreign assistance is both necessary and appropriate.●

S. 2311 AND A NEW CBO REPORT: "NEW DIRECTIONS FOR THE NATION'S PUBLIC WORKERS"

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, an issue that the Congress must address next year is the renovation of our public works infrastructure.

Earlier this year, I introduced S. 2311, the Environmental Infrastructure Act. I intend to do all that I can next year to see that this bill, or something close to it, is enacted into law.

America needs to encourage the rebuilding of our public works, not simply with more Federal dollars, but by encouraging State and local governments to invest more, and by encouraging greater public-private partnerships to meet our environmental, as well as other infrastructure, needs.

I was encouraged by the publication last week of a new report issued by the Congressional Budget Office. This report, "New Directions for the Nation's Public Works," addresses many issues on how we, as a nation, can do more to build and renovate our public works.

This report is the third in just over 1 year that deals with this important issue. The first was a report issued by the Senate Budget Committee's Private Sector Advisory Panel on Infrastructure Financing. The second was the report of the National Council on Public Works Improvement. Each offered important insights into the problems and the solutions.

For that reason, Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to examine all three of these reports. To assist in that process, I ask that a copy of the summary and introduction from the CBO report be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The material follows:

SUMMARY AND INTRODUCTION

The importance of the nation's public works infrastructure has been demonstrated recently by mounting delays in highway and air travel and by dramatic episodes such as the closing of the Williamsburg Bridge in New York City. While concern for the state of infrastructure is widespread, no consensus yet exists on how to improve the effectiveness of infrastructure programs or how to pay for them. This report examines ways to reconcile the need for a sound infrastructure with the Congress' commitment to fiscal restraint.

In the last three decades, the federal government has greatly expanded its role in providing public works infrastructure. While continuing its century-old commitment to build major water resources projects, the government has also subsidized state and local investment in transportation and in environmental facilities. By 1988, federal infrastructure outlays totaled $26.6 billion (see Summary Table).

Over the years, the Congress has periodically assessed the adequacy and efficiency of these programs. Recently, the focus of the reviews has shifted from the problems and prospects of individual programs to issues common to infrastructure policies generally. In 1983, for example, the Joint Economic Committee of the Congress conducted a wide-ranging survey of the nation's infrastructure problems. In 1984, the Congress established the National Council on Public Works Improvement to assess the state of the infrastructure. The Congressional Budget Office is required by Public Law 98-501 to review the findings of this Council. Accordingly, the study reviews some of the issues raised by the council's final report, "Fragile Foundations: A Report on America's Public Works" (1988); the appendix focuses more specifically on the Council's findings.

Two difficulties arise in attempting an overall assessment of infrastructure programs. The first is the difficulty of defining infrastructure. This report analyses five major infrastructure modes—highways, aviation, mass transit, wastewater treatment, and water transportation—that are consistent with a definition of infrstructure as those facilities that provide a foundation or basic framework for the national economy, and in which federal policy plays a significant role. A sixth area consistent with this definition—groundwater and surface water resources—will be addressed in a future CBO report. This definition excludes some facilities often thought of as infrastructure—such as public housing, government buildings, private rail service, and schools—and some environmental facilities (such as hazardous or toxic waste sites) where the initial onus of responsibility in on private individuals.

The second difficulty arises in determining how well a particular set of policies meets the variety of objectives that governments pursue in supporting infrastructure development. Here different viewpoints enter—those of economic efficiency, social policy, and national defense, among others. This study is written from an economic perspective and appraises programs in terms of their cost-effectiveness. At the same time, it recognizes that criteria of economic efficiency may have to give way at times to social or political considerations.

The extent to which the different infrastructure areas examined here share common characteristics is striking. While important differences exist, the infrastructure areas (or "modes") can be thought of as alike in four ways: they have common origins, they have made common achievements, they face common challenges, and their problems may have common solutions. Recognizing these common characteristics should help to set new directions for infrastructure programs.

COMMON ORIGINS

The nation's infrastructure programs were created to serve many purposes, but federal involvement was motivated by three principal concerns. First was the need for coordination. Federal programs in highways, airports, air traffic control, and inland waterways were undertaken because no other jurisdiction could plan a system of such facilities from a national perspective. If left to their own devices, for example, localities would underinvest in roads (since many of the benefits of these investments accrue to people outside their boundaries) or in air traffic control (where a single national system is needed to make commercial air transit possible). Federal programs were designed to lead localities to make investments from a national rather than a local perspective, or to make national investments where localities otherwise would have little reason to do so.

The second motivation for federal involvement was to spread the financial burden. For example, after requiring that all municipalities clean their water to a minimum standard, the federal government provided funds to help them build wastewater treatment plants that would attain this standard. Similarly, when faced with a wave of private transit financial failures in central cities, the Congress enacted a federal mass transit program to lighten the burden of putting these fleets back into operation.

A third motivation was to promote social policy goals. Inland waterways, ports, and water supply projects were all subsidized as a way of promoting or revitalizing economic development in individual regions. Mass transit was seen as part of a policy to revitalize urban cores. Mass transit, aviation, and highways were all conceived, in part, as ways to increase the mobility of the population and to integrate the various regions of the country. In this sense, infrastructure programs have actively sought social goals as a collateral benefit of economic expansion.

COMMON ACHIEVEMENTS

The infrastructure programs share common achievements in two respects: almost all have accomplished their initial goals to a great degree, and together they have forced state and local governments to develop bureaucracies capable of planning, administering, and financing these areas of public life—so much so that many states are now widely recognized as imaginative infrastructure managers.

While all the nation's infrastructure facilities may never be "finished" since there will be ongoing needs for maintenance, expansion, and replacement, significant accomplishments have been made in all areas of infrastructure. The Interstate Highway System as currently planned is about 98 percent complete, and all funds needed for its completion will be obligated by 1993. The United States now has more highways per person than any other industrialized country; its roads are used at only about 15 percent of capacity in rural areas and 40 percent of capacity in urban areas. Water supply projects have led to the regional development of the West, so much so that the Bureau of Reclamation now believes that adequate water supplies often can be achieved more efficiently through conservation than through new construction. About 90 percent of the wastewater treatment plants needed to meet current regulatory standards have been built; as a result, the ongoing deterioration in water quality prevalent only two decades ago has been arrested.

The standard of achievement is not uniform. Mass transit programs have often encouraged localities to apply incorrect solutions to their transit problems: new systems in Miami, Washington, D.C., Pittsburgh, and Atlanta have all raised the cost of providing transit while attracting far fewer riders than predicted. Nationwide, the use of trains and buses continues to decline except for trips from suburbs to urban centers, but such trips now account for only one-seventh of trips to work. Although the largest urban rail systems—New York City, Chicago, Philadelphia, and Boston—are in need of renovation, many smaller urban systems have more capital equipment than they can use although they are still drawing operating subsidies from the federal government. In air transportation, the antiquated traffic control system is a major source of delays, and the rapid recent growth in air traffic has brought peak hour congestion to the airports.

The federal government's initiatives have also led state governments to become more productive partners in infrastructure management. State governments are now more capable of managing their infrastructure systems and many are widely recognized as being innovators in infrastructure finance.

COMMON CHALLENGES

The various infrastructure modes confront, each in its own fashion, similar sets of challenges. The most important of these may be the transition fron an era of construction to an era of management. Just how well federal infrastructure programs perform in this new era will depend, in part, on the incentives that the programs offer to infrastructure users and to state and local infrastructure managers. Federal programs now also confront an institutional environment far different from that for which they were designed.

Management

The transition from an era of construction to one of maintenance, rehabilitation, and replacement is evident in almost all modes. In highways, for example, the rate of return on maintaining the condition of the federal-aid highway system is on the order of 30 percent to 40 percent, while the rate of return on new construction, save in certain urban areas, is very low. For aviation, the most pressing general need is to modernize the air traffic control system.

In mass transit, newly constructed systems have not reversed the decline in transit's share of commuting. Nationwide, mass transit operates at a low level of productivity, and transit fleets are too large. A contradiction may be seen in that the older major urban systems need repair; while nationally an unobligated balance of $850 million sits in transit accounts for lack of new construction projects that qualify for aid.

Similarly, about half of the locks and dams on the inland waterway system will have exceeded their design lives by the year 2000. Many of these locks will require major rehabilitation.

Construction is not a thing of the past, but where construction is needed (as it is to some extent in all modes), the needs are regional rather than national. Moreover, the needs are typically for alleviating congestion rather than anticipating or promoting growth. The area farthest from its initial goal may be wastewater treatment: the Environmental Protection Agency estimates the remaining need for wastewater treatment plants at a total construction cost of $76 billion between now and 2005. Perhaps half of these outlays, however, would be needed even in the absence of federal statutes.

Incentives

As currently structured, federal infrastructure programs fail to provide either infrastructure users or state and local managers with incentives to make efficient choices. Since the benefits of using facilities are not tied to the costs of providing them, federal programs lead to inflated perceptions of the demand for infrastructure. The current programs also give state and local managers no incentives to solve infrastructure problems with "nonstructural" approaches, and often encourage them to select projects that create local, rather than national, benefits.

Infrastructure managers must not only decide what facilities to build, but also price them in a way that will optimize their use. Charging prices that are too high would lead to underuse and reduce the productivity of the infrastructure investment, while making roads, ports, and mass transit available without charge would lead to their overuse and rapid deterioration. In only two of the seven major federal programs—highways and airports—are fees now high enough to defray most of the federal spending. And even in these programs, some users—notably, operators of heavy trucks and private planes—pay less then their share of costs, while other users—light truck operators and airline passengers—make up the difference by paying fees that recover more than the costs they create. In each of these programs, below-cost pricing leads users to request more infrastructure services than they are willing to pay for, while planners get an exaggerated perception of investment needs from these misleading signals about infrastructure demand.

Water transportation projects are conspicuous in their failure to charge users for the costs of water transportation. The 1986 Omnibus Water Resources Development Act required that user fees finance up to 50 percent of the costs of new construction, but in 1988 user fees still covered only 21 percent of the Corps of Engineers construction costs on inland waterways and 9 percent of total Corps costs for inland navigation. Thus, users of the inland water system are subsidized while those who use competing freight modes—particularly rail—are not. Water projects also deliver water that is allocated through historical rights at prices far below costs, leading to overconsumption and underinvestment in conservation. Ironically, this overconsumption of water, particularly in agriculture, increases water runoff and, in turn, water-based pollution and the need for treatment of rivers and streams.

Another set of common problems arises from the incentives given a state and local infrastructure managers. First, the structure of federal financial assistance leads state and local infrastructure managers to substitute federal funds for their own. This phenomenon of "fiscal substitution" takes place in a variety of infrastructure modes, most notably in wastewater treatment (where federal grants appear not to have led to more rapid construction of wastewater plants and may have led to actual deferrals of plant construction). Substituting federal for local funds also occurs in highway programs outside the original Interstate system (where statistical evidence suggests that federal assistance has had far less than its maximum impact).

Second, even where it has truly added to spending, federal assistance may have altered the choices made by local officials without satisfying federal interests. In mass transit, for example, where capital purchases are subsidized to a far greater extent than are maintenance expenditures, municipalities regularly retire buses before the end of their useful lives and purchase new equipment with federal funds in excess of service requirements. In wastewater treatment, plants have commonly been built to subsidize local economic expansion rather than to service current needs.

Institutions

A final challenge that confronts all infrastructure programs is a changing institutional environment. Regions that once depended on inland water transportation now have new alternatives as a result of changing technology and the deregulation of most transportation industries. The deregulation of air travel has led to a more efficient system of "hubs and spokes" for airlines, requiring airports to be more flexible while at the same time leaving them more vulnerable to changes in airline routing. State and local governments, and the capital markets that serve them with funds, are learning how to manage and appraise infrastructure projects. In addition to the traditional general obligation bonds, many state governments now employ new devices such as bond banks, revolving loan funds, and special taxing authorities to finance their projects.

COMMON SOLUTIONS

The chapters that follow evaluate a wide range of options intended to make federal infrastructure policies more responsive to current challenges. While differing in their details, most of these options stem from four approaches: pricing infrastructure services more efficiently; targeting federal assistance more effectively; assigning more infrastructure responsibilities to states and localities; and fostering greater competition among different forms of infrastructure for federal funds. These approaches seek more cost-effective infrastructure programs. Cost-effectiveness is not the only goal of infrastructure spending, however, and sometimes may conflict with other such as income redistribution or the economic development of particular regions.

Pricing infrastructure services

Better pricing of infrastructure services—that is, more reliance on user fees—would help to achieve a number of goals. Better pricing could reveal how much people value different infrastructure services; by giving managers better information about the cost-effectiveness of different projects, user charges could enable them to improve their investment decisions. Proper pricing could also ameliorate congestion, whether that congestion is specific to particular localities (as with highways and inland waterways) or to particular times of day (as in aviation). Varying airport landing fees by time of day, for instance, would shift some traffic to off-peak hours. Similarly, user fees at locks and dams on the inland waterways could cause some cargo to be shipped by rail or other alternative systems.

Most existing user fees are designed simply to recover some portion of infrastructure costs. While increasing those fees could help finance infrastructure investment, it would do little to increase the efficiency of that investment. Most current fees—the highway gas tax, the inland waterways fuel tax, the harbor maintenance tax, the airline ticket tax—are the same throughout the country, although both the demand for services and the cost of providing them vary dramatically by place and time. Current fees reveal little about how users value particular facilities and thus do little to direct investment toward projects that benefit users most. Similarly, landing fees that do not vary with the time of day can recover an airport's relevant operating costs but do little to reduce peak-hour congestion. In many cases, efficient infrastructure pricing would require changes in the structure and the level of fees.

An increased reliance on user fees have two drawbacks. First, the efficient use of facilities may not be the only goal of an infrastructure program. To the extent that federal subsidies are intended to provide nonmonetary income transfers (as in the cases of federal support for water supply, mass transit, and aviation services to small towns), increased user fees clearly would be at odds with this purpose. Sometimes infrastructure programs are intended to spur regional economic development, and in such cases user fees would reduce the regional subsidy.

Targeting Federal assistance

The fact that federal costs are set at fixed shares in most forms of infrastructure implies that national benefits are equal for every project within each mode. In reality, some projects offer greater national benefits than others. One way to improve the targeting of federal assistance would be to vary the share of federal costs according to the expected benefits of each project. This could be accomplished by negotiating the federal share on a project-by-project basis or by defining different shares for different subclasses of projects ("tranches"). The greatest drawback would be the administrative costs involved in conducting many negotiations. Negotiating aid could also make federal aid less stable over time, adding an element of risk to state and local investment planning.

Targeting could also be improved by restructuring programs so that benefits would go directly to the intended beneficiaries. For example, one purpose of urban mass transit is to provide mobility to poor people; this assistance could be furthered by issuing transportation vouchers rather than subsidizing all ridership on mass transit systems. On the other hand, when a program serves a number of purposes (for example, mass transit is also intended to promote urban economic development and reduce congestion and pollution), it may be more efficient to provide services rather than cash.

Assigning more responsibilities to State and local governments

State and local planners may be able to make better decisions than national authorities, given their proximity to local problems and conditions. This advantage will continue only so long as their decisions do not have a significant impact outside their jurisdictions. Where the benefits of infrastructure programs accrue predominantly outside a state's jurisdiction, the federal government may have to act in the interests of other states.

For programs aimed at creating strictly local benefits, state and local governments may be the appropriate level of decision-making. Some may argue that mass transit, for example, is not a national infrastructure problem, but a local one. The original intent of the federal mass transit program was to help municipalities assume responsibility for bankrupt private systems. With that goal accomplished, additional transit investments arguably could be funded at the state and local levels. Similarly, state and local governments already finance all aspects of port development other than dredging. These services could be contracted from the private sector rather than provided on a subsidized basis by the Corps of Engineers.

Even when the benefits of infrastructure programs are primarily local, however, asking states and localities to take on greater financing responsibility might be inconsistent with the social goals of these programs (such as income redistribution or regional economic development). Moreover, increasing state control over infrastructure spending would tend to substitute state spending preferences for federal preferences.

Fostering greater intermodal competition

Investment in all classes of infrastructure could be improved by having federal grants foster competition among infrastructure programs for public and private resources. Among the approaches examined here are:

Allowing states to trade in some portion of their categorical grants in any one accounts for funds in another account, perphaps on less than a dollar-for-dollar basis.

Merging the major parts of all infrastructure programs into one broad-purpose "public infrastructure" block grant.

Creating a national infrastructure financing facility that could perform a range of roles, from formal screening of all large-scale federal projects to financing large facilities on a project-by-project basis.

All of these options would seek to tailor federal infrastructure spending more closely to local conditions. They would give more weight to local interests in allocating funds among infrastructure programs. Most of them would accomplish this by giving states and localities greater flexibility in apportioning funds among in infrastructure categories. Easing conditions on the use of federal funds implicitly assumes either that the national benefits of all infrastructure programs are equal or, more likely, that federal interests can be better pursued by allowing greater variation in the response to local infrastructure problems.

Another argument in favor of greater state and local control is that categorical programs no longer need to be as narrowly defined as they formerly were. Nearly all categorical grant programs for infrastructure were originally designed to create national systems and to marshal state involvement. In large measure, both of these goals have been achieved. Moreover, as capital markets have become more diverse and borrowers more sophisticated, a broader set of projects can now be funded locally.

To be effective, however, these options would require reorganizing the federal and state infrastructure bureaucracies, which have been designed to evaluate only projects within particular infrastructure categories. At the extreme, of curse, merging al programs into a single infrastructure system might deny the legitimate differences among modes or overlook the fact that some level of investment in each is a stipulated national goal regardless of economic merit.

Finally, many of the benefits of greater competition for resources among the infrastructure modes could be achieved by requiring federal program managers to present more explicit statements of gosls, to make more frequent evaluations of past projects, and to use common standards in measuring such variables as the cost of accidents, the value of health improvements, the value of time lost to delay, or the discount rate. Under the current budgeting system, agencies are allowed to plan programs on the basis of the current level of services offered. But circumstances change, as do rates of return and the degree to which agency missions have been accomplished. Requiring agencies to prepare more detailed "sector plans" that took explicity account of the returns on their proposed investments would allow the Congress to make decisions among alternative programs and thus improve the allocation of national resources devoted to infrastructure.●

NATIONAL POW/MIA RECOGNITION DAY PROCLAMATION

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, the United States observed National POW/MIA Recognition Day on September 18, 1988. This day served the important and dual purposes of maintaining this issue in the forefront of the public mind and assuring the families of those still missing that their Nation has not forgotten the sacrifices nor the plight of their loved ones. To further these goals, I request that an honorary proclamation on National POW/MIA Recognition Day, signed by Gov. Roy Romer, of Colorado, be printed in the RECORD.

The honory proclamation follows:

HONORARY PROCLAMATION: POW/MIA RECOGNITION DAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1988

Whereas, Americans appreciate the dedication and courage of those in the military who defend the nation's democratic principles; and

Whereas, we applaud the dignity, faith and valor of those who gave their lives or were captured and imprisoned; and

Whereas, we appreciate the plight of the families whose loved ones remain missing or unaccounted for; and

Whereas, efforts must be made to secure the release of U.S. personnel who may still be held against their will and to obtain the fullest possible accounting of those still missing;

Now, therefore, I, Roy Romer, Governor of Colorado, proclaim September 16, 1988, as "POW/MIA Recognition Day," in the State of Colorado.

ROY ROMER,
Governor.●

ARTHUR S. WALTZMAN

● Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, it is an honor for me to rise today in tribute to Mr. Arthur S. Waltzman, who will receive the Nate Mack Las Vegas Lodge of B'nai B'rith "Distinguished Man of the Year Award." The ceremony, which takes place October 23, 1988, will highlight the career of this outstanding citizen.

His gracious generosity, and tireless efforts on behalf of the members of the Las Vegas community are indeed commendable. He is active with the United Cerebral Palsy campaign, the Make A Wish Foundation, the Jewish Federation of Las Vegas, and the B'nai B'rith Salute to Seniors Committee.

Arthur Waltzman is a shining example of the American spirit of volunteerism and selflessness. I am proud to join with Las Vegans and Nevadans in congratulating him on this tremendous achievement.●

MI CASA WOMEN'S CENTER DROP-OUT PREVENTION PROGRAM

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, earlier this year I was pleased to bring to the Senate's attention an innovative high school Drop-Out Prevention Program sponsored by the Mi Casa Women's Center in Denver, CO. This program, known as "Project Takeoff," is designed to assist young women who have dropped out of school—and who need special support and encouragement to resume their studies, earn diplomas and secure productive employment. Mi Casa is a United Way Agency that successfully utilizes corporate sponsorships, charitable donations, and the talents of people in the community it serves, to promote education and job training for young women at risk.

As the Senate is continuously challenged to address our Nation's educational needs, the drop-out problem has loomed as one of our most persistent and pressing problems. Dropping-out is particularly devastating for minority and other "at-risk" students. A recent study by the Bureau of the Census indicates that in some parts of the country, half of all Hispanic youngsters leave high school prior to graduation. Unless we act to correct this problem, we may be left with an entire generation of Americans who cannot compete intellectually or economically as our nation enters the next century.

Although it is impossible to accurately measure the cost of the drop-out problem in human terms—in broken lives, lost opportunities, and unfulfilled dreams—we can estimate its economic impacts. A recent Stanford University study estimated that the lifetime cost to society is about $200,000 per individual—including $20,000 in social services, $50,000 in lost tax revenues, and $130,000 in lost net income. There can be no doubt that the drop-out problem represents a real threat to the Nation's long-term economic and social well-being.

That is why I want to take this opportunity to acknowledge the fine work of the Mi Casa Women's Center. Project Takeoff identifies young women who have dropped out of school, and by combining effective counseling and educational services in an intensive 10-week course, redirects them back to school and a brighter future. I particularly want to commend Ms. Geri Gonzalez-Lopez, Project Takeoff's coordinator, for her enthusiasm, energy, and deep commitment to community service.

I also want to acknowledge the courage and spirit of 11 young women from my State who recently graduated from the Project Takeoff Program: Valerie Bailey, Gina Bisonette, Marcella Cespedes, Karen Evans, Leticia Martinez, Victoria Medina, LaVon Romero, Robin Smith, Shawn Taylor, Verkerie Williams, and Rebecca Workcuff.

Each one of these young women deserve our congratulations and our thanks—not only for turning their own lives around—but for setting such a fine example for other young Americans. Their success should underscore how hard work and a commitment to education can make a big difference in individual lives.

I commend the Mi Casa Women's Center Drop-Out Prevention Program to my colleagues in the Senate. It is a prime example of what can be accomplished when you combine corporate dollars, creative community leadership and personal initiative.●

CONGRESSIONAL MICROMANAGEMENT

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, this is the third in a series of speeches I have made on the role of the Congress in managing the Pentagon. Today, I will speak about congressional micromanagement.

INTRODUCTION

I was first prompted to make these speeches when the Pentagon procurement scandal was revealed in June. I said then—and repeat today—that we must resist the temptation to impose another round of so-called reforms that will only further complicate and burden an already overburdened procurement process. Rather, I ask that we seize the opportunity of the recent Pentagon scandal to explore some of the underlying causes of Pentagon mismanagement.

It is my basic contention that one of these underlying causes is Congress itself. While the Pentagon has its share of problems, we have exacerbated many of them and have even created some of them. Certainly there can be no excuse for those Pentagon officials and consultants who have committed fraud. But by imposing a complex thicket of laws and regulations, we in Congress have contributed in making procurement an unbelievably complex and prolonged undertaking, and have therefore helped to create an environment in which outside advisers are essential to contractors—often separate expert advisers for each step of the way. Short cuts and unethical behavior associated with them become more and more attractive in these circumstances.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—OR MICROMANAGERS

Congress sets a bad example when we let parochial interests guide our own defense decisions. During consideration of the fiscal 1989 Defense appropriations bill, I offered an amendment to eliminate $1.7 billion of defense spending that the Pentagon did not request—much of it unnecessary pork. Pork is just another indication of congressional micromanagement of the Pentagon. I was asked during debate on that amendment whether Congress should forgo its roll in defense—as though its roll was defined by the amount of pork in the bill. I believe Congress should act as a board of directors—not as hands-on managers—setting broad policies and goals. And yet, with every budget cycle, Congress delves deeper and deeper into more and more details of the defense management process—much of this intervention done by people who have little knowledge or experience in defense.

SIZE OF BILLS

One indication of our growing involvement and micromanagement is the sheer size of the legislation. In 1970, at the height of the Vietnam war, the Defense Authorization Act totaled 9 pages, with a 33-page conference report accompanying the bill. The authorization bill enacted into law in 1975 was just 15. The 1989 bill is 288 pages and the conference report 194 pages. Lots of goodies are tucked away in that massive legislation.

BUDGET TESTIMONY

In addition, as our bills expand, Congress asks the Pentagon for more and more documentation each year. First, during the budget process itself, Defense Department officials provide hundreds of hours of testimony, often duplicative, to congressional committees. In 1983, before the DOD stopped counting, defense witnesses provided 2,160 hours of testimony before 96 different committees and subcommittees, up almost 50 percent from 1982. The 1985 Defense Department funding request was accompanied by more than 20,000 pages of budgetary justification; and this paperwork hasn't gotten smaller since.

It's no wonder that the Blue Ribbon Commission on Defense Management, better known as the Packard Commission, reported that:

> The present method of budget review, involving duplicative effort by numerous congressional committees and subcommittees, centers on either the minutiae of line items or the gross dollar allocation to defense, and obscures important matters of strategy, operational concepts, and key defense issues.

CONGRESS REQUIRED 715 SEPARATE REPORTS

The paperwork doesn't stop after the legislative process ends. When Congress does pass its annual spending and authorization bills, the Department of Defense is left with a heavier and heavier burden of reporting requirements to various congressional committees. This chart illustrates the astounding increase in congressionally imposed reporting requirements. Between 1970 and 1985, the number of DOD reports required by Congress increased 12 times! The 1986 Defense appropriations report required 676 reports from the Pentagon. It took the equivalent of 182 full-time employees a year to get those reports written, at a cost of $18 million. The average cost of one of those reports was $25,714. For most families, that is close to a year's income; for Congress, it only buys one report.

And this burden continues to mount. In fiscal year 1988, Congress required 715 reports from the Pentagon. And now that we are coming to the end of fiscal 1988, I would be interested to know how many of my colleagues found the time to read the report on the "section 501 extension of authority to make temporary promotions of certain Navy lieutenants"? How much did us nonengineers get out of the report on "tensioned architectural structures"? At the same time, I wonder whether a congressionally mandated report on the "number of and expenditures for military bands" did much for our national security? Indeed, Mr. President, the expense of military bands is cause for concern; but is this a matter for congressional attention given the severe limits on our time for defense oversight? Who found time to read the report on morale and recreation programs—or the two reports on the supervision of nurses? Finally, there is a congressionally required report on the subject of—what else?—"Defense Department reporting requirements"!

In addition to the reporting requirements imposed in annual spending bills, there are some 319 provisions of the law which impose periodic reporting requirements on the Pentagon. These interesting reports include a stored equipment report, annual map and chart plant report; and, of course, a very popular report on the "acquisition of power-operated collators for use in facilities other than printing plants."

Few, if any, read the annual report on the cataloging of supplies and stocks by the military departments. And in the age of high technology welfare, do we still need an annual report ensuring that the domestic textile and apparel industry can keep our soldiers clothed. I suspect that that report has more to do with protecting our workers from foreign competition than protecting our soldiers from foreign enemies. Some of these reports really sound unnecessary. The DOD has to explain to Congress every time the weight of a small mobile intercontinental ballistic missile exceeds 30,000 pounds when deployed. Frankly, I am more interested to know whether they will reach their target—even if they do weigh 30,001 pounds. Mr. President, I am sure that religious leaders the world over looked forward to the DOD report on the faith composition of the chaplains of the Armed Forces. But, once again, I doubt whether this is a matter that requires congressional oversight. Also, I wonder how many of our constituents feel more secure knowing that the Congress is checking up on the Pentagon's "Rules and Regulations To Implement, the Archeological Resources Protection Act of 1979."

ALTERING MOST LINE ITEMS

Mr. President, these reports are more than a nuisance: They are an embarrassment—or should be—and more. A 1985 staff report of the Armed Services Committee warned that congressional micromanagement has reached "crisis proportions." It is a crisis when lawmakers sacrifice time best spent considering broad military strategy and spending guidelines and instead focus on individual line items. A study of the fiscal year 1984 budget showed that of the Pentagon's 1,860 line item requests, the House altered

1,190 and the Senate 1,160. A 1985 Washington Post article points out that such intervention is unparalleled in other democracies. While other congresses and parliaments discuss the organization of their armed forces, we focus on what boots our soldiers will wear.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I hope that my colleagues and their staff who have heard and reviewed my remarks during the past weeks will be prompted to consider how Congress oversees the Pentagon. A number of reforms have been suggested in recent months: biennal defense budgeting; more multiyear procurement; reform of honarariums; closing the so-called revolving door; creating a civilian procurement agency; and so on. Congress will no doubt review all these proposals. For my part, I would urge us to get our own house in order. Let us establish longer term budgeting. Let us cut our congressional pork in the defense budget. Let us resist the temptation to become involved in every detail and require a report on every action. If we become an effective board of directors again, the business of the Pentagon will be better run as a result.●

IN PRAISE OF A MOST UNIQUE CONDUCTOR

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to call to the attention of my distinguished colleagues a success story brought about by a most remarkable woman and her cadre of persevering individuals dedicated to the betterment of education. The woman is Dr. Lucille McKillop, the president of Salve Regina College in Newport, RI, a small Catholic college whose beautiful campus rests on the shore of the Atlantic Ocean.

Sister Lucille, as she is fondly known on campus, accepted the post of president in 1973. She was well aware at that time that hers was not an easy task to undertake, for the college was experiencing severe financial difficulties and serious morale problems. During her tenure Sister Lucille has brought Salve from a $1.2 million operating budget with a $1 million deficit, to a budget of $20 million operating in the black. The student population has doubled to 2,163 since 1973, and a once rock-bottom faculty salary has risen steadily by approximately 8 percent each year. Not only has Sister Lucille put Salve's fiscal house in order but she has also expanded the academic programs of the college. In addition, a project of campus renovation has taken place both esthetically and technologically in order to keep pace with the changing demands of our time.

Although President Lucille McKillop refuses to accept complete credit for her brillant efforts, modestly asserting that she is "* * * like a conductor * * * taking the bows, but the school is the orchestra * * *," clearly she is the driving force behind the success of this fine institution. I commend Sister Lucille for bringing together various members of the Rhode Island community to raise the funds necessary to bring great strength and vitality to Salve Regina. I am certain we will continue to sing the praises of this most unique and talented conductor for as long as she continues her fine work with a talented and well-tuned orchestra of dedicated and resourceful people.●

AIDS AMENDMENTS OF 1988

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, the Senate has just passed S. 2889, an omnibus act dealing with a number of health-related issues. Title II of that Act is titled the "AIDS Amendments of 1988."

Title II deals with a matter that is of enormous concern to the entire country and to this Senator. And frankly, I am troubled by some of the policies incorporated in title II.

I am concerned, for example, that the version we have just passed does not contain the spousal notification amendment that was in S. 1220 as it orignially passed the Senate. In the original Senate version of S. 1220, States were prohibited from receiving funds under the Act if they had laws or policies that penalized physicians for notifying spouses of a positive AIDS test. The version of S. 1220 that was just passed contains no such requirement.

I am also concerned that the Act we have just passed provides funds for anonymous testing only. Mr. President, anonymous testing is not the only kind of testing that we should be funding under title II of this bill. As many of us know, Colorado has an excellent program of confidential testing and contact tracing. It is not only a thoughtful approach, but many States have turned to Colorado as a model program for dealing with the AIDS crisis. The Colorado program is confidential but it is not anonymous. In Colorado, no AIDS test result has ever been given to a person who did not have a right to it. Colorado's program protects certain information while allowing those who are at risk to be notified.

Between January 1986 and December 1987, the Colorado partner identification program achieved the following successes; 282 HIV positive persons were interviewed and 508 sexual partners were identified.

Of the 508, 414 were found and notified of their risk.

Of the 414 who were warned, 44 had already tested positive but 370 had not been tested.

Of those 370, 74 refused to be tested but 296 took HIV tests.

Of the 296 tested, 45 were HIV positive and 251 were negative.

The Colorado program is enlightened and effective: 45 persons were notified that they carry antibodies to the deadly virus and they were notified before they otherwise would have been aware of their status. I join other citizens of my State in thinking that this kind of program will save lives.

Now, Mr. President, we have just passed a bill that provides grants to States for counseling and testing but only if the counseling and testing are done on individuals who are not "required to provide any information relating to the[ir] identity" and who are allowed to use a pseudonym. The language of the preceding sentence is from that part of S. 2889 that will add a new section 2431 to the Public Health Service Act. Frankly, I was afraid that S. 2889 would not allow Colorado to qualify for counseling and testing funds under S. 2889 because, as I have explained, the Colorado program is confidential but not anonymous. I have been assured, however, that Colorado's program would qualify for testing money under title II of this Act.

Based on that assurance, Mr. President, I informed the managers of the Act that I had no objection to its consideration although, I still have serious reservations about certain provisions.

In my opinion S. 1220 was not a good bill when it first passed the Senate, but a majority of our colleagues thought otherwise. I would have preferred a different bill—indeed, the managers themselves would have preferred a different bill. But, I do not expect bills that pass this body to be in every way acceptable to me. This is a political institution where compromise is standard operating procedure.

When I was assured that title II of S. 2889 would not operate to the detriment of the very excellent Colorado program, nor treat Colorado in a discriminatory manner because of its fine AIDS notification program, I agreed to withdraw my reservations.

I thank the manager on this side of the aisle for his help and assurances on this matter.●

COMMENDING ADMIRAL HAYS ON HIS RETIREMENT

● Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, earlier this month, the Commander in Chief of the U.S. Pacific Command, Adm. Ronald J. Hays, retired from active duty after more than 40 years of military service. I had the good fortune to know Admiral Hays and work with him in a number of his key positions over the years. I would like to take a few minutes to salute this outstanding naval officer on the occasion of his retirement.

Soon after his graduation from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1950, Admiral Hays completed flight training and began a long series of operational assignments in naval aviation units. Those assignments were followed by several staff and command positions of increasing responsibility. In 1980, Admiral Hays became Commander in Chief of U.S. Naval Forces, Europe. Then, 3 years later, he was promoted to the four-star rank of admiral to serve as the Vice Chief of Naval Operations. On September 18, 1985, Admiral Hays assumed the position of Commander in Chief of the U.S. Pacific Command or CINCPAC until he retired on October 1 of this year.

As the senior U.S. military officer in the Pacific and Indian Ocean areas, Admiral Hays led the largest of eight unified combatant commands in our military command structure. He directed Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force operations across more than 100 million square miles—over 50 percent of the Earth's surface.

It was particularly in this last assignment as Commander in Chief of the U.S. Pacific Command that many Members of Congress and their staffs had the opportunity to work with Admiral Hays. From his vantage point as CINCPAC, he developed an expert and well-balanced perspective on U.S. security interests in his area of command. During Admiral Hays' tenure as Commander in Chief, several developments in the Pacific continued to enlarge the importance of this dynamic region to America's security: Around the rim of Asia, countries from South Korea to Thailand initiated or sustained impressive economic growth; a peaceful revolution reintroduced democracy into the Philippines; South Korea took encouraging steps toward implementing its own democratic reforms; hopes were raised that Vietnam may finally have decided to withdraw from Cambodia; and our security relationship with the People's Republic of China was gradually strengthened. Admiral Hays' views on these developments, as well as on a variety of other security issues, have been invaluable to me and other Members of Congress.

Of particular note was his insistence that we approach U.S. security interests in this region from a standpoint of our overall strategy. The Armed Services Committee also noted his efforts to implement both the spirit and letter of the Goldwater-Nichols Defense Reorganization Act in his command.

On a more personal note, Mr. President, I would like to thank Admiral Hays for his courtesy to me, my staff, and the committee. Over the years, he has been very generous in sharing his time and views with us, whether in public hearings or in private meetings. I greatly appreciate his willingness to help us with our legislative responsibilities.

Again, Mr. President, I commend Admiral Hays for his important contribution to our country. We are all grateful for his service. Although we will miss him on active duty, we wish him and his family all the best and hope that they will keep in touch with their many friends in the Congress.●

MISSISSIPPI NATIONAL RIVER AND RECREATION AREA

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today in support of H.R. 2530, the Mississipppi National River and Recreation Area bill.

Mr. President, most Americans know something about the important role that the Mississippi River has played in the history of our country. Also, many tourists visit the source of the mighty Mississippi, at Lake Itasca, in northern Minnesota. But as this mightly river flows south it takes on added commercial use. As it reaches the St. Paul-Minneapolis metro area, there are several State and local planning efforts to help fully utilize the river's resources. A concentrated effort by Federal, State, and local governments is required to balance the historical, recreational, private, and commercial uses of the mighty Mississippi.

This legislation, Mr. President, provides for a Mississippi River Coordinating Commission to assist in the development and implementation of a management plan. The importance of this bill is represented by the fact that the entire Minnesota congressional delegation has cosponsored it. Mr. President, it is indeed a rare piece of legislation that receives such unanimous, bipartisan support from the Minnesota delegation.

While I agree that it is important to have a coordinated plan for the Mississippi River in the Twin Cities metro area, I am also concerned about safeguarding the rights of the State and local governments that are already working to preserve the historic value of the river while utilizing its commercial recreational potential. More than 20 city governments, 5 counties, and the State of Minnesota have worked to this end for years.

I want to commend Senator Durenberger for his diligent effort to work out a compromise that allows for greater coordination of all governmental programs that are involved along the St. Paul-Minneapolis Mississippi River corridor. I am pleased to have assisted in the compromise and urge my colleagues in the Senate to support this legislation.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May I interrupt the majority leader momentarily for a piece of business that should be clarified here?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

APPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the President pro tempore, pursuant to Public Law 100-360, appoints the following Senators to the U.S. Bipartisan Commission on Comprehensive Health Care:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Kennedy], the Senator from Montana [Mr. Melcher], the Senator from Montana [Mr. Baucus], the Senator from Maine [Mr. Mitchell], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Durenberger], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Heinz].

The Senator from South Carolina.

SCHEDULE

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I just wanted to propound a question to the distinguished majority leader. As I understand it, when we finish the drug bill, which we should be able to do within a reasonable time on tomorrow, it will be the plan to bring up the bill agreed to on the judges, and some legislation that is pending in connection with those judges. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. I hope that can be done.

Mr. THURMOND. I thank the leader very much.

Mr. BYRD. I am confident that progress is being made on that matter. I want it to be made. I am not one of the direct participants. I do not have any dogs in that fight except I want to get as much business as can be transacted done before we go out. We do have a considerable amount of business that awaits the agreement on the judges.

Mr. THURMOND. I think it is all clear. As I understand it, there was some question about one judge from Alabama. Both Senators from Alabama favor the judge. I believe the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts wanted to do a little more investigating, which I believe he has had a chance to do yesterday and today. I have a feeling that by tomorrow he will clear that judge, and that will clear the package.

Mr. BYRD. That may very well be. I cannot speak for that. Being the eternal optimist that I am and as is proving that I have not been, I do not think, wrong in the case of the drug bill, I think that in the matter that the distinguished Senator alludes to there will be an agreement that will free a considerable number of judges and a considerable amount of legislation. But I cannot speak with any definitude to the details of that package.

Mr. THURMOND. There is certain legislation in this package that can be freed up at that time when that is done, including the Genocide Treaty and some other things.

Mr. BYRD. Yes; that would be one of the items, I understand.

Mr. THURMOND. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. BYRD. I thank my good friend, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND].

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the recognition of the two leaders there be a period for morning business until 10 o'clock and that Senators may speak during that period for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESUME CONSIDERATION OF THE DRUG BILL—GRAMM AMENDMENT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning the Senate resume consideration of the substitute to the House drug bill, and that an amendment by Mr. GRAMM, loss of Federal benefits, which appears in category 3, be the pending question at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. I further ask that any amendments thereto be germane and relevant; otherwise, that they not be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does the distinguished Republican leader have any further statement or business he wishes to transact?

Mr. DOLE. No further business.

Mr. BYRD. Does any other Senator?

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 9:30 A.M.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 9:30 tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and, the Senate, at 7:59 p.m., recessed until Friday, October 14, 1988, at 9:30 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, October 13, 1988

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Open our eyes, gracious God to the suffering and pain and illness of others. We admit that we see statistics of need, we see pictures of suffering and we can show the graphs and know the reality of poverty. So open our hearts, O God, to translate what we see and hear concerning the wrongs in society, into generous deeds of mercy for those about us. May our good works become the evidence of our faith and our deeds demonstrations of our love. This we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

CONGRATULATIONS TO DONN ANDERSON ON ELECTION TO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF ASSOCIATION OF SECRETARIES GENERAL OF PARLIAMENTS

(Mr. SCHEUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, just a few weeks ago I had the pleasure and privilege of attending the 99th annual Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference in Sofia, Bulgaria, in the company of our distinguished colleague, Senator Claude Pepper. It was a marvelous conference, and among those who were part of our delegation was the permanent secretary of our delegation and the Clerk of the House, Donn Anderson.

Donn also serves as a member of the Association of Secretaries General of Parliaments from around the world, which is the organization of chief administrative officers of national parliamentary bodies. They meet from time to time and conduct examinations and exchanges of information on various procedural and administrative matters.

I am very proud to inform the House that at the Sofia Conference our Clerk, Donn Anderson, was unanimously elected to the executive committee of this great Organization of Secretaries General of Parliaments from around the world. As the new Secretary General and as a member of the association, it was an especially great honor for Donn to have his contributions so recognized. Apparently, Mr. Speaker, Donn has achieved and earned the same credibility, respect, and indeed affection among his parliamentary Secretaries General from around the world as he has here in this very Chamber among the 435 Members of the House.

I think we can all take very great pride in that, Mr. Speaker. It is a real expression of respect for the foremost parliamentary body of the world, the U.S. House of Representatives of the U.S. Congress, that our Clerk, Donn Anderson, has achieved this remarkable global recognition among his peers.

THE QUALITY CHILD CARE DEMONSTRATION ACT OF 1988

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced, with Congresswoman Nancy Johnson, the Quality Child Care Demonstration Act of 1988. I am especially pleased to introduce this bill, as it was inspired through our work with model child development centers in California's 19th Congressional District.

The Quality Child Care Demonstration Act of 1988, establishes a demonstration block grant program to increase the quality and availability of child care by identifying exemplary, center-based child development centers. These models will recruit, train, support, and monitor family care providers, that now often operate unregulated and are difficult for potential consumers to locate. It enables child care providers to inform parents of their services, while encouraging family care providers to associate with high quality child development models. Children also benefit from enhanced care while the emotional security of a sustained relationship with their provider is encouraged through continuity. These model centers also include a child care information center and community outreach program to encourage potential child care providers.

I am pleased to promote a program that provides our parents the freedom to choose quality child care options that suit their individual needs. I invite my colleagues to join me in support of this program.

CONGRATULATIONS TO NATIONAL LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP WINNERS, THE LOS ANGELES DODGERS

(Mr. LEVINE of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, nobody said that the Los Angeles Dodgers had much of a chance to win the National League Pennant in 1988. Yet Tommy Lasorda, the Dodgers' superb manager, called this a team of destiny.

Last night America witnessed this gutty and gritty team shut out a powerful New York Mets team and become the National League champions.

Mr. Speaker, I think our colleagues would like to join in extending congratulations to this terrific group of athletes. The pitching performance of Orel Hershiser, both during the season and during the playoffs, is nothing short of amazing. The pitching of Tim Belcher to win two games in this playoff, the clutch hitting of Kirk Gibson, even when injured, the dramatics of Mike Scioscia coming from behind in the ninth inning in the fourth game in New York. The next day Rick Dempsey, whom fans in this area will recall for his clinch heroics in the 1983 World Series in Baltimore, came through with two clutch doubles. Steve Sax was sensational all week—and all year. The play of Mike Marshall, Tim Leary, and the rest of the Dodger lineup, some of whom are not household names, players such as Jeff Hamilton, Alejandro Peña, John Shelby, and Franklin Stubbs, have had an excellent year.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is appropriate for us to join together to congratulate this gutsy team, its marvelous manager, Tom Lasorda, its great organization, led by Peter O'Malley and Fred Claire, and wish them well as they continue to surprise people in the baseball world as they go into the World Series this week in California.

LET US GET PCB VIOLATORS OUT OF THE PCB BUSINESS

(Mr. CLINGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like you to imagine the unimaginable. Try to visualize a company in your hometown, in fact, right down the street from your house, that is licensed to dispose of toxic PCB waste. You eventually become aware that the company is illegally storing PCB waste, is selling scrap metal that is still contaminated with PCB's, and has serious recordkeeping violations that make it virtually impossible to determine what has happened to hundreds of pounds of PCB waste. You notify the Government of the company's violations, but 2 years pass before even an inspection of the company's records takes place.

Finally, after the firm racks up $2 million in civil penalties, the Government decides not to renew the company's PCB disposal permit. You would probably heave a sigh of relief at this point. However, your relief may have been premature.

After losing its permit, the company simply reopens shop, not as a PCB disposer, but as a PCB broker. The firm is still allowed to take in PCB's, still allowed to transfer PCB's and still allowed to store PCB's. The company doesn't need to obtain a permit for its new business, in fact, it doesn't even have to tell the Government that it is once again handling PCB's.

Mr. Speaker, this is not unimaginable—this is not fiction. This is exactly what has happened in the past in Kansas City and what may be currently happening throughout the Nation. As long as PCB brokers remain unregulated and unidentified, this same nightmare remains a possibility.

The Senate has a chance to change the law. It has the opportunity to almost immediately close the loopholes that allow this kind of situation to exist.

The PCB Regulatory Improvement Act is now bottled up in the Senate. I urge my colleagues on the Senate to help prevent a repeat of the travesty I have just described by bringing the PCB Improvements Act to the floor and supporting its passage.

THE PRESIDENT NEEDS THE LINE-ITEM VETO

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with every single position that the head of our Democratic ticket has taken this year, Governor Dukakis, but I do agree wholeheartedly with one that he took and which was reported today on the front page of the Washington Times newspaper. That is that among the many steps Governor Dukakis would take if he is elected President to reduce the deficit and control all of this economic turmoil is the selective use of the line-item veto.

A line-item veto, as we know, is possessed by 43 of the Nation's Governors, most of whom are Democrat, and yet it continues to perplex me that my party has a very strong and almost antagonistic stand against the use of the line-item-veto.

But I do salute Governor Dukakis for realizing, as so many Governors have realized, that the only way to get a balanced budget is to give the Chief Executive that authority. I certainly hope that the National Economic Commission, which at this moment is deliberating its report which will be issued in December to the new President, on all of the steps to be taken to reduce the deficit and to balance our budget, I devotedly hope that they will consider prime among their recommendations the adoption by this Congress of a line-item veto.

I have introduced legislation; much of it is pending. If we were to adopt that in the 101st Congress, I do believe we will get to the root of our economic problems and balance the budget once and for all.

SPECIAL TRIBUTE TO THE 776TH TACTICAL AIRLIFT SQUADRON

(Mr. NELSON of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, like so much of the heroism and sacrifice of American veterans of the Vietnam conflict, the contribution of the 776th Tactical Airlift Squadron has gone largely unnoticed and unrewarded.

In March 1975, a young man from my district, Maj. David F. Antoon, was a member of this squadron stationed at Clark Air Force Base in the Philippines. As a C-130 pilot, he and his unit were called upon to assist in the evacuation of Saigon between March 21 and March 29. During this time, these men made eight flights in total darkness under enemy missile attack and carried thousands of innocent people to safety.

Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to imagine how these young men must have felt as they headed into the night on these missions. But I can tell you, many lives were surely changed with each flight. Mark Twain said courage is, "resistance to fear, mastery of fear—not absence of fear." Mr. Speaker, these men had much to fear. They made their approach from 20,000 feet to avoid detection and the risk of enemy missile attack. A crewman was stationed at each door with a flare gun to shoot at incoming heat-seeking missiles. If an incoming missile had been detected, the C-130 pilot had orders to turn his craft toward the missile to keep its exhausts away from missile sensors.

A C-130 plane is equipped to carry 88 people, yet each mission lifted 250 refugees to safety. Eight attempts and eight successes almost make it sound easy. But other missions were not so fortunate—on March 29 a C-130 was hit by mortar fire and lost as it landed. Another was attacked by a captured American A-37 flown by a North Vietnamese pilot. This same A-37 bombed a helicopter during the operation killing approximately 100 people.

Mr. Speaker, efforts to secure specific awards and medals on behalf of Major Antoon and the airmen of the 776th Tactical Airlift Squadron to officially recognize their heroism and afford them the dignity they so well deserve have been unsuccessful. I hope that my words here today will serve to remind us of this unit's achievements and the individual acts of brave men who deserve our full support, respect, and admiration.

STRONG SANCTIONS URGED FOR SOUTH AFRICA

(Mr. WISE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remind my colleagues that while it may not be the most prominent news story at the moment, the situation in South Africa has not changed. The state of emergency remains in effect and thousands, many of whom are children, continue to be held in detention. On August 11, 1988, this body passed a strong sanctions package which I ardently supported. I rise today to encourage my colleagues in the other body to act as well. While time is indeed short, it has not run out. The situation in South Africa demands action, serious and decisive.

Many have argued that sanctions do not and have not worked in the case of South Africa. The GAO report released yesterday proves that sanctions are working—have cost the Botha regime at least $469 million since sanctions were imposed. The progress of the Angola negotiations clearly demonstrate that the apartheid regime is feeling the squeeze. I urge my colleagues in the Senate to pass the same decisive legislation that the House has.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE "EDDIE" BOLAND

(Mr. MARKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, after 35 years of service in the House of Representatives, and after more than half a century of public service, my friend, and colleague from Massachusetts, EDDIE BOLAND, is retiring.

Let me put the depth and experience of EDDIE BOLAND's service into perspective by pointing out that he was elected to this body when I was 7 years old.

While I grew up, he served this body year in and year out with distinction. He has been here, steady and steadfast, even as the tides of change swept this country through the fifties, sixties, seventies, and eighties.

During all those years he has been this institution's Rock of Gibraltar.

He has always been there, always dependable, always able to deliver. He has always gotten the job done.

In the early part of this decade, as chair of the Select Committee on Intelligence, EDDIE BOLAND became more than a Congressman.

He became a statesman when he wrote the amendment bearing his name which helped bring an end to the Reagan administration's illegal war in Central America.

Millions of Americans learned about EDDIE BOLAND and the Boland amendment during the Iran/Contra hearings.

To many of them, that is how he will be remembered.

But we know that in his decades of service, in his capacity as chair of the HUD-Independent Agencies Subcommittee, as the ranking Democrat on the Appropriations Committee he has done so much more.

I wish him a happy and healthy retirement.

UNITED STATES-MEXICO BORDER REGION HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5462) to provide assistance for housing and community development in the United States-Mexico border region of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5462

SEC. 5. APPLICABILITY.

This Act shall apply only with respect to fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Bustamante). Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Gonzalez] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Bartlett] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Gonzalez].

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5462 represents a 100-percent bipartisan effort in one of the most innovative bits of legislation that I have seen that was authored as an original author by our very distinguished colleague from Texas, from the 16th District, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Coleman]. It was a very comprehensive bill originally known as H.R. 4606. It had multiple committee jurisdiction in various portions of the original bill.

One of the more important sections, section 2, was sequentially referred to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs and thence to the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Development where we had hearings and very illustrative, very valuable hearings in which it was clear that this condition, which also the Speaker pro tempore is very knowledgeable of since his district is one of those that adjoins the Mexico-United States border. But along this 2,000 mile border, as Mr. Coleman was quick to recognize, there has been a persistent and an endemic sort of disallowance on the part of us nationally to permit the flexibility in the use of the programs that are in existence. In other words, it is not necessary that we legislate de novo in such areas as housing, Farmers Home Administration Housing, assisted housing programs, HUD, and community development programs such as the Congress has through the years devised and put into action. What is necessary is that we reconstruct and coordinate these policies and laws in order to enable the States to, in turn, focus on individual county unit sections of government up and down the border so that they can be effective in their applications and in their accessibility to these programs.

The conditions as revealed in the hearings, not only the hearings held by our subcommittee, but the hearings held by other committees, the Committee on Public Works, the Committee on Agriculture, reveals that we have a situation on our side of the border that ordinarily we tend to associate with what is sometimes called a situation of Third World countries.

I myself have never believed in such a thing. I think we are all one world.

What we do have, as we have internally and domestically, citizens who for whatever reason are sunk in poverty, in the misery of illness and disease and lack of educational opportunities.

So that I wanted to make clear, though, that the leadership here that has been indispensable has been that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Coleman].

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume, to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Coleman].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding this time to me.

I want to say "thank you" on behalf of some residents of the United States, American citizens who live today without water or sewer service.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 5462, a bill to assist the "colonias" along the United States-Mexico border region. For those of us who represent the border area, there is no doubt that this region lags behind the rest of the country in developing its economic and human resources, and this bill is an important first step in providing assistance for residents to improve their living conditions.

I want to especially thank the chairman of the Housing Subcommittee, my good friend HENRY B. GONZALEZ, for the great leadership he has provided toward getting this bill on the floor. Without his assistance, I am sure these communities would have no hope of receiving Federal assistance. By the same token, I would like to thank my colleague from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] for his support of this legislation, and the staff at the Subcommittee on Housing who have worked so hard on this legislation.

Most recently, many of you have probably learned from media accounts about communities along the border commonly known as "colonias," communities where residents live without necessities that you and I take for granted—water and sewage service. You must understand that living without these necessities is not merely an inconvenience, it's a health hazard. We have counties in this country today that have rates of disease higher than many underdeveloped countries. We have children who look forward to their physical education class because they can bathe there and not at home. We have families who have to haul water in jugs for drinking and cooking. I do not believe these are acceptable conditions for our residents. And I do not think you consider these conditions acceptable either.

This is why I would hope you support this legislation. This bill provides the funding mechanism to provide for the costs of preliminary planning, and the construction and assessment costs involved in alleviating some of the conditions in the colonias using the small city CDBG and FMHA programs. It is important to note that this bill does not create a new program and does not call for additional appropriations. We are not seeking to additionally burden our Federal budget. What we propose to do is to target funds from existing programs to our most distressed communities in the border States of California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas.

Under this bill, colonias would receive a 10-percent set-aside of the small cities CDBG funds going to each State. For the following fiscal years 1990 and 1991, the set-aside for colonias is not to exceed 10 percent. Because these counties involved have neither the manpower nor resources to effectively accomplish the preliminary planning activities associated with water, sewage, and housing activities, these funds would be used to cover the costs of providing information and technical assistance to the residents of colonias and the States and counties in which they are located. These funds can be used for preliminary surveys and analyses of market needs, preliminary site engineering and architectural services, site options, applications, mortgage commitments, legal services, and obtaining construction loans. This includes the costs of providing information and technical assistance to residents of colonias and may go to non-profit organizations and public agencies acting on behalf of the residents.

The bill also makes colonias eligible for FMHA programs by amending the definition of "rural area" in section 520 of title V of FMHA specifically for the purpose of qualifying colonias for this housing assistance. To ensure that only colonias are affected by the amendment, the term colonias is defined for purposes of this bill. The bill requires that the State give priority to applications received from colonias for FMHA housing assistance grant and loan programs.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation. This legislation has been passed by the Banking Committee, with the support of both sides of the aisle and the support of all members of the committee. In support of this legislation, a statement will be supplied by the ranking member of the Banking Committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE].

This is legislation that needs to be adopted, and I want to join with my colleagues, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ], representing the San Antonio area, in their support of this legislation. The fact is that in addition to what has been done before, we are passing legislation that helps to correct a problem that seriously needs to be corrected. In this case the sponsors of this bill and the Banking Committee have done it right.

We have not created any new programs or provided any new expenditures of Federal moneys. In fact, what this legislation does is it makes the colonias developments eligible for existing Federal programs. Therein lies the problem, and the solution is with this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, today literally tens of thousands of individuals along the borders live in circumstances of the worst and most unsupportable kinds of living conditions, unsupportable and comparable in many areas with conditions found in Third World countries. The reason for that is they live in these areas called colonias, which are small plots of land side by side, sold and subdivided as plots of land, but without the basic urban infrastructure put into those colonias. They are sold without sewer and water and other items of infrastructure. Thus these people live in very crowded conditions without the infrastructure required under the usual urban conditions.

The problem with the Federal law in this regard is that these colonias are defined neither as rural areas nor urban areas. Indeed they are both, but for purposes of community development block grants and the Farmers Home Administration, the two basic programs that help to provide these kinds of services, the colonias have been defined as neither. So there is a large gap in the law, a gap in definition, and it is that gap in definition that this legislation would seek to correct.

The legislation basically does the following: First of all, it sets aside for these small cities, these nonentitlement cities in the Community Development Block Grant Program, a portion of the CDBG money that is administered by the State. It sets aside 10 percent of those moneys for the four States in which the colonias are an issue.

As a Member of Congress I have to say, like many of my colleagues, that I think we all had a problem with that set-aside and with that micromanagement of what is a State block grant. Nevertheless, in talking with the States, we find the States themselves have no problem with this. In fact, this is an area where States ought to be spending a great deal of their nonentitlement block grant money. So while philosophically it is a problem, as a practical matter this needs to be done, and the States themselves support it.

Second, the most important change in this bill is that it makes the colonias eligible, first, for community block grant development funding for planning for sewer and water development in colonias. This is an activity they are not now eligible for. And that is for the urban areas, and second, for the large rural grant program for the Federal Government to conduct similar activities, it also makes colonias eligible for Farmers Home. Thus we remove the catch-22 in the law that prior to this legislation had made colonias eligible for neither urban grants nor rural grants.

I have one other comment, Mr. Speaker. This legislation is not in and of itself going to solve the colonias' problem.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas, the gentleman from the valley with colonias in his district.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I just want to clarify the issue, because there are many misconceptions or erroneous perceptions of colonias and their problems, and as it relates to Farmers Home, I want to state to the gentleman that colonias are eligible for Farmers Home assistance if they fit into the program. It is only in some very specific areas that they are not. So the catch-22 is a minimal thing.

There are people living in colonias now that have been given assistance by Farmers Home and that are eligible for Farmers Home assistance if they qualify as to the criteria for population. It is only where they may be within the confines or adjacent to a larger city, but it does not mean that help has not come forward and help has not been given. But in a small area, that is where the problem lies.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. There still is a problem, and the problem is in those colonias that are adjacent to a large city. It is their adjacency that makes them ineligible.

I would say that the gentleman from the Rio Grande Valley, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, has been as prominent and active and supportive as any Member, and he has been more helpful than many, I think, in terms of securing eligibility for the colonias to correct these problems.

I think the gentleman's clarification was helpful, but I would say there is still that catch-22 that this law would seek to remove.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise only because at this point it is very important that we understand why this bill is being considered at this time.

Our colleague, the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA], is correct in saying that the Farmers Home Administration does help except in housing. It provides sewage and water resource grants, but not housing. This is the reason why this subcommittee has acted in this very important respect. The Farmers Home Administration in its subsidizing housing program for rural will not act in a purely defined situation such as we are trying to outline in the colonias areas nor has it any track record of assistance. It does help in sewage and water resource grant activities. It has been, I think, very responsible in that respect.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, again, very respectfully, let me say that Farmers Home does provide assistance for housing in the rural areas, and there are many colonias in my district, for instance, in Hidalgo County. The residents have secured Farmers Home Administration loans to build houses. It is only where they are out in the population of the community that has the restriction. But I could not let this pass that Farmers Home has not assisted in housing, because they have.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his clarification, and I will yield further to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] in just a moment.

To make sure that we all understand what this legislation does in the area of Farmers Home, No. 1, it mandates that Farmers Home and, therefore, the Agriculture Secretary, give priority to colonias applying for assistance for the years 1989 through 1991; and, No. 2, it amends section 520 of the Housing Act to allow colonias to apply for Farmers Home assistance.

Both those colonias, as the gentleman from the Rio Grande Valley has stated, that are now eligible in the rural areas and, most importantly, those colonias that are adjacent to an urban area and that under Federal law without this bill are neither rural nor urban are affected, and this essentially says that those colonias adjacent to an urban area will be eligible for both.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to be disputatious about this, but the trick is that is the first time an effort has been made to have some kind of a definition made of "las colonias."

My distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, in referring to assisted housing grants through the Farmers Home Administration, in his area particularly, is actually targeting areas that qualify under the existing rules and regulations of the Farmers Home Administration for assisted housing but which are not generalized enough to cover those definitions that we are targeting. And the gentleman himself has said that some. So the whole problem is that those areas that have been assisted are really not defined as "colonias," as the colonias are defined in the 16th District or as they would be defined in Arizona or as they might not be defined in California.

So what we are saying, in all fairness to everybody, is this: This is just an attempt to define the scope and remove the limitations that prevent certain sections along the border that are defined as "colonias" and that have not been eligible to receive grants to be able to do so.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I think our distinguished subcommittee chairman has just explained the situation. As all of us agree, it is and should be clear, and as I stated in the beginning, my concern is that the finger cannot be pointed at Farmers Home that it has not been assisting or that it has not been sensitive, that those of us who work in the area with Farmers Home have been insensitive, but, rather, there is that very small exception. And it is almost specifically around El Paso where the problem arises, because in my area the small communities and even the other communities qualify. So the colonias comes in with the small communities, and what we are addressing and what I want to clarify is this: That we cannot say the Farmers Home Administration and those of us who have been working in this area have been insensitive, but, rather, that there is a narrow area where it needs to be defined, and this is what this legislation tries to correct.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his clarification.

I think it really must be said that this bill does not attempt to point blame at anyone. This legislation is an attempt to at least provide some portion of the solution, and the fact is that there has been that catch-22 in spite of the good will and the active and able and hard work of the gentleman from the valley, the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA], and others. In spite of that, there still remains, first, a catch-22 in the law which some colonias were eligible for neither urban nor rural assistance. That is not the intent of the chairman of the Agriculture Committee nor the intent of Congress nor the intent of the Farmers Home Administration, but that is the way it was. And second, this is an enormous problem in the colonias outside of El Paso alone, because there are some 10,000 people living without running water. More than half of the residents of the colonias along the four-State border lack running water. Sewage and waste disposal systems are either nonexistent or woefully inadequate in each of them. So there is an enormous problem, and this bill at least gives additional eligibility to CBDG and the Farmers Home to help to solve the problem, and it would in no way diminish the efforts the Farmers Home Administration has already made within the confines of the law that they had to deal with.

Let me make one other point, Mr. Speaker. I feel compelled to say that this was not a problem that was caused by the Federal Government, and this is not a problem that can be solved by the Federal Government. All of the funds from the Community Development Block Grant Act nationally combined would not be enough to resolve all of the sewer, water, electricity, and infrastructure problems in the colonias. Those problems can only be solved by a combination of State, county, private developers, and the home owners or lot owners in the colonias. That is where the bulk of the funding for the infrastructure has to come from, and we should not fool ourselves into thinking that any level of government, and particularly the Federal Government, can finance the construction of all those sewer and water and infrastructure developments. But what we can do is make Federal programs designed for the infrastructure eligible to provide assistance.

I have one other thing to say, and that is that the essential problem, relating to what allowed the colonias to be built in this way in the first place, has been at least partially resolved in the State of Texas in any event by State legislative action, by granting to counties zoning authority. But that means that those counties have to accept their responsibility and have to require sewer and water tie-ons and the full infrastructure system for these small lots before they permit subdivision and platting. Otherwise the problem will only continue to get larger.

Mr. Speaker, I would also call to the attention of the Members of the House the fact that we have a letter from the Congressional Budget Office dated October 5, 1988, to the chairman of the Banking Committee which says in part: "We estimate these changes" meaning section 203, as amended, "would result in no cost to the Federal Government or to State or local governments."

Mr. Speaker, this is a removing of the catch-22 and the increasing of eligibility for existing programs.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

□ 1045

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ], the chairman of the subcommittee, and I extend my appreciation for his interest and assistance in this endeavor.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that both the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] and all of the Members from the border have been working diligently as possible, and I commend all of them and would unite my efforts along with them. Sometimes we do not agree on the specifics of which road to take, but that does not mean any less interest in the problem, and, as I have been mentioning prior to our other distinguished colleague from Texas, that, having had the responsibility for Farmers Home, the jurisdiction in the Congress, and having worked with the so-called colonias that are now being discovered by many people of good will and good intentions, but really not knowledgeable of the specifics, that it may cause some problems that in trying to assist may be hindered.

Mr. Speaker, this is not so in this legislation, for this is targeting specific amounts for specific areas, but I did want to clarify that, for example, in my congressional district some $36 to $38 million in the past 10 to 12 years have come in for rural water supply for example. We still have a ways to go, but we have rural water supply districts. The one that serves almost 100 percent of the so-called colonias, and colonias is very difficult to define, and there is no exact way that one could really define it except that they lie in areas because of the developer and his either fraud and/or negligence.

Mr. Speaker, these neighborhoods have sprung up without the adequate resources of water and, sometimes, power for electricity in housing, and the housing has been more a problem of lack of zoning authority by the counties except for those that are adjacent within the territorial limits of a city. So it has not been for lack of effort, but rather that the proliferation that when we brought water, and sewers and power to a colonia, another one springs up. Same developer; just starts all over again.

Mr. Speaker, that is the frustrating part because, for example, there is a colonia called Balboa Acres now within the limits of the city of McAllen. We brought water to Balboa Acres, power was brought to Balboa Acres, assistance in housing has been brought to Balboa Acres, but within 6 months of that springs out a new neighborhood which may or may not be called a colonia.

So the more important thing though is that, as the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee mentioned, that it address an issue that has been a problem, and for that we are thankful and commend him for his interest.

Mr. Speaker, there is some concern that we have been studying; we have had commissions, five commissions and/or groups, that I can remember, and I do not think what we need is another commission or another group to study. As I have mentioned repeatedly, and people quote me now, the first thing, the first thing the commission did, was come and measure our heads with some anthropologists. Well, all we knew was what we needed was jobs, and beyond the jobs we needed water and power, and they still, many of the so-called colonias, do not have paving. For example, the kids cannot get out to school and back, and that of course is with the community or the county that has to help.

But this is a good step forward, and I commend the gentleman from El Paso, my colleague, the chairman of the subcommittee and all of the others of good will that have joined in our effort, and not that we have not been working, not that the existing agencies have not been funneling funds into the area, but we need more assistance, and the end result is going to be jobs.

Jobs, jobs, jobs, and a good income, that will take care of everything because I say to my colleagues, "If you got the money, you buy you a good house, and you buy it in a neighborhood that has power, and water and sewerage."

So, Mr. Speaker, this is an effort to assist like on the fringes of where the problem is. We still have to maintain that a good-paying job is going to be the final solution.

I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] for having yielded me this time.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Brownsville, TX [Mr. ORTIZ].

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ], my good friend; the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA], the chairman, and Members from the Border Caucus for their tremendous input in helping us with this legislation. I certainly appreciate the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] bringing this legislation to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my strongest support for H.R. 5462, and urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

This legislation would target needed funding through the Community Development Block Grant Program to colonias along the United States-Mexico border.

Basic human necessities are not available for many colonia residents.

Clean water is available to few colonia residents, and decent sewage treatment service remains a dream for the many in these communities.

This lack of sanitary facilities leads to high rates of disease, which naturally restricts the residents' ability to attain their full potential in work or school.

This funding could contribute to a long-term solution for the residents of colonias.

All States along the United States-Mexico border would be eligible to receive these funds, because the colonia problem is not restricted by State boundaries.

With these thoughts in mind, I urge my colleagues to support this bill under suspension of the rules.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I did want the record to show, so that we can establish a little bit of legislative history, that our very distinguished colleague from the valley and the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA], had pointed out a matter of concern to him in the legislation having to do with a commission.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it patently clear that this legislation; that is, H.R. 5462, does not create a commission. What the language referring to a commission in turn refers to is the visualizing of the development of some plan at some subsequent time, at which time other committees having other jurisdictional approaches to this same problem will be able to conform to such a devised plan that may or may not include the formation of a commission. This legislation, I wanted to assure my colleague, in no way creates a commission.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GONZALEZ. I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, let me only add that, and I say this respectfully to my colleague from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA], that many of us believe that unless and until we have the ability to research and define the areas where help is most needed and where we can best utilize national resources that we will not be able to solve the problem at all.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to say that all we need is more jobs, but more jobs mean economic development. Economic development is very difficult to acquire in a region of the State where there is no water or where we have sewer problems, where we have, nonetheless, many people ready, willing, and able to work, but we have no economic development.

So, Mr. Speaker, some of us feel very strongly that a commission is the right way to go, but I would say to my colleague from the valley that in this bill we do not have a commission. This is only one piece of what used to be a much larger bill, and I would say that the way that the Subcommittee on Housing and the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs handled this legislation is for this time appropriate.

So I would say that while it is easy to be against commissions, I have sought for a long time to find an alternative solution to a commission so that we can provide and target assistance to the areas where it is most needed.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] for yielding this time to me.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas is correct in one respect, that there are many people of good will who now have come forward to try and help, but we have to look at the antecedents. We just suffered through a commission that did nothing. Prior to that was another commission that sought more water initiative.

So, all that I am saying is this has not worked. I have been there. I would hope that they do, and that is my frustration, that just saying another commission is going to solve the issue. I disagree with the gentleman. Jobs are going to solve the issue in the end, and not another commission.

Mr. Speaker, the Vice President's task force, I think, is in existence now, and nothing is happening.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, let me say that I agree with both of my colleagues. But this is not the issue.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, we are not debating whether we should or should not have a commission. This legislation simply does not provide the issue, it does not set up a commission, and that is all I was trying to really explain and clarify for legislative history purposes.

I want to add that not only the gentleman who spoke last, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ORTIZ], not only has he been very active, because every one of the gentlemen; the Speaker pro tempore, for example, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUSTAMANTE], has a good section of the border, all the way from Del Rio down to Laredo, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] goes downstream, and for years in the State legislature and since 1964 here in the Congress has represented this border area. So, if anybody is knowledgeable, they certainly are, including the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] with the 16th District upstream, up in the El Paso area and the Big Bend. So, what we have here is that very fortunately our Speaker chose as a Speaker pro tempore to preside over this a gentleman who has not only a district that he is representing, and prior to that he has been in the county of Bexar a county judge, and even in such an urban area as Bexar County we have the equivalent of colonias.

Mr. Speaker, the use of that word "colonias" has been so common among the Mexican descendants going back to the days of heavy Mexican immigration during the revolutionary period in Mexico that in San Antonio for years my family was part of la colonia Mexicana, the Mexican colony, because this is the way it was referred to. So we must understand that in the use of the word "colonia," we have a very, very generalized interpretation.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT], and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA], who intended to be here, but she has other pressing business, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE], the ranking minority member of the full committee, and of course we have heard from our distinguished Mr. BARTLETT, have made it possible for us to come here today in a completely unanimous, bipartisan fashion.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] has the district in Dallas County, a very urban county, but yet he is very sensitive to the needs of his fellow Texans, and, without the help of all these gentlemen, we would not be here today, and I wanted to be sure that the record reflected their great contributions and indispensable help.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I will make three additional points, and this is a clarifying and helpful debate on the discussion on the floor today. In addition to the points that have already been made, I would comment, first of all, that the one place that I find in the bill in which the word "commission" is mentioned in my judgment is an error in drafting because the bill makes no provision—nor should it, I would concur with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture—nor should it make a reference to the commission.

□ 1100

So from listening to the discussion, I think it is generally agreed that that is an error in drafting, should be regarded as so, and prior to the passage of the bill by the other body or to its enrollment, that error in drafting should be reduced and the debate over a commission should be put off into another piece of legislation. It is not appropriate for this bill, because no commission is created in this bill, nor is there any intent, any legislative intent whatsoever, to use this legislation to create a commission.

No. 2, I would note that there is another leave out of this bill that the next session of Congress could I hope address, and that is the HUD administered Land Sales Act is an act that in this Member's judgment could be used in a much more forceful manner to reduce and eliminate the creation of new colonias. That is an error that has been made by the last several administrations, not just this one, and it is an error that could be corrected by congressional action in making certain that the Interstate Land Sales Act is enforced as to its intent with regard to colonias.

Last, I would say that it is my hope, and I know that the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA], and also the sponsor of the bill, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN], have visited colonias from time to time, and it would be my hope that sometime over the recess that some kind of a more formal visit led by one of the appropriate committees could be held, and I would seek to join and bring some other nonborder State representatives to meet with the residents and to visit the conditions and to focus on solutions firsthand.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from El Paso, TX.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, let me say on behalf of a number of Members of Congress from both sides of the aisle, members of the Public Works Committee, under the subcommittee chairmanship of our colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK], we have had hearings held in the colonias in several areas. We had them in El Paso, as well as Brownsville. I think they were well done. I think there was an education that really occurred there, and I welcome the gentleman's future visit to the area with Members of both sides of the aisle as well.

I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I would also like to invite the gentleman to my area of the border, either individually or with a group or under the auspices of a committee.

The Committee on Agriculture also plans to continue oversight, working on legislation to visit and have formal hearings in the area, and hopefully so we may clarify some of the misconceptions that some people have, or try to imagine things that may or may not be. The better we can document that, the better all of us will be.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his interest.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his leadership on the subject and for his invitation and look forward to visiting on site to the colonias in south Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BUSTAMANTE). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5462.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 4585, EDUCATION PRIORITIES FOR RESEARCH AND CONSTRUCTION, AND AGAINST CONSIDERATION OF SUCH CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 585 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 585

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report on the bill (H.R. 4585) to extend the authorization of appropriations for the Taft Institute through fiscal year 1991, and all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are hereby waived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WHEAT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 585 provides for consideration of the conference report on H.R. 4585, to extend the authorization of appropriations for the Taft Institute through fiscal year 1991. The rule waives all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to authorizing appropriations for the Taft Institute, this bill includes a number of programs adopted by the other body and recommended by the conferees.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us is a matter of concern to all of us. I urge that we adopt the rule so that we may proceed to consideration of the conference report.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, as has been stated, this rule waives all points of order on this conference report. This is not unusual, but Members should be aware there is considerable controversy regarding this matter.

When H.R. 4585 passed the House, it was simply an ordinary reauthorization for the Taft Institute. As it returns to the House floor today as a conference report, however, it contains 19 additions costing more than $60 million for the 19 additions alone. So, we have a bill which has been expanded significantly in scope and cost in the conference committee.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote against the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS].

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I recognize that there is going to be some controversy on this bill, and that is to be expected at this time of the year. There are always one or two bills at the end of the session which try to do things which under other circumstances probably would not raise many questions. But, as we bring legislation to this floor rapidly and try to give it as much consideration as we can, but try to push things through, there comes a time when people want to say, "Hey, let's rebel against something." I understand there are a number on my side who feel this is the time to rebel.

Well, I disagree with that. It is true that we have some matters in here that you might want to question, but at the same time there are many good provisions.

Also, you have to remember that some of these provisions already have been provided appropriations, but do not have an authorization.

On the other hand, there are some provisions that are authorized or would be authorized here without appropriations. So what we are doing is to put them into the appropriations process and state that these are good ideas, too, and that the Appropriations Committee should consider those programs when the Congress begins the appropriations process next year.

Let me first talk about the Taft Institute. The Taft Institute is also known as the Taft Institute for Two-Party Government and is a living memorial for the late Ohio Senator, Robert A. Taft. The institute's purpose is to promote understanding of the two-party system of government by our citizens. This purpose is accomplished through educational seminars across the country.

Such seminars bring elementary and secondary teachers together on college campuses for 2- to 3-week intensive educational programs. At these seminars these teachers study the U.S. Constitution and examine our system of two-party self-government. It is my understanding that nearly 200 Members here have participated in these seminars.

We get rather discouraging and depressing indications in polls of the lack of knowledge of many of our students in this country's two-party process. I think this is a worthwhile program.

There are other programs which I think certainly deserve our consideration. Items that cannot be reauthorized or authorized without some sort of special legislation, unless you wait several years until either the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act, or the reauthorization of the Hawkins-Stafford bill with respect to primary and secondary education.

Let me just give you an idea of some of these. First, there is a Critical Languages and Area Studies Program, backed by myself and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Conte] and the gentleman from California [Mr. Panetta]. This important new initiative would allow eligible consortia to apply for grants to operate critical languages and area studies programs. Eligible consortia may develop, construct, and acquire educational equipment, materials, and facilities in order to develop teacher training programs, texts, and other language instruction techniques.

We have very discouraging statistics with respect to the knowledge of foreign languages in our country. Despite evidence that foreign language training should begin at the elementary and secondary levels, fewer than 19 percent of all high school students study foreign languages and fewer than 1 percent become proficient. This legislation would attempt to get us involved more in foreign language studies, to try and increase our proficiency as we move into the new era of trying to be a better world leader and to be able to compete on the international scene with respect to trade.

There are other provisions in here for which money has been appropriated. There is a historically black college, Voorhees College in South Carolina, which needs a new health facility. There are provisions of the bill which need no funds. There is a technical correction which would remove a serious problem in one particular program.

So granted, there are some provisions that could be referred to as special interests. One such program was included as part of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act that we enacted this year. Now there are other regions of the country that want to participate in this program and are ready to move into this era where we can utilize better satellites for educational purposes.

This will give them a chance to get into the appropriations process in order to have an opportunity to develop those programs, along with others that have already received authorization.

So I would hope you would take a look at all 19 of these projects and recognize that we have had witnesses testify before the committee on many of these programs expressing their need and desire for what we are trying to do, including as well the Taft Institute. So I would hope that you would recognize the rule should be approved. We will have an opportunity to discuss in more detail the individual provisions in order to make sure that we give a fair hearing to this bill which has been brought out of conference.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Goodling].

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I would hope that as a matter of fact we could defeat this rule today and that we would then next year do what we should do whenever we consider legislation, that we have the necessary hearings, we have the necessary markup in subcommittee and in full committee and then bring the issue to the floor. When we do these things in the manner that I just described, we generally come up with very sound legislation.

We also show to the public that as a matter of fact we are very responsible people.

It is always embarrassing when you come to the end of the year, the last year of the higher education bill, how embarrassing to sit there and watch the House see whether they can outdo the Senate in adding things that were never really given much consideration.

Here we have a piece of legislation that left the Education and Labor Committee as a straight reauthorization of the Taft Institute.

Now, keep in mind the Taft Institute started in 1961, did not seem to need any Federal funds. It was not until 1980 until we got into the act of federally funding the Taft Institute.

It does some good things, but it did them without our help.

Then the bill went to the Senate and they could not resist in the closing time of this session adding whatever certain Members wanted to add to the bill.

Then it came back to the House, and some might lead you to believe as a matter of fact that we were greatly upset by what the Senate did. There were some of us who were greatly upset with what the Senate did, but there were others who just fell right in line and said, "Well, if the Senate is going to do that kind of thing, then certainly don't count us out. We don't want to be a piker in this deal." So we jumped into the act on our side.

So now we do have 19 additions. I do not say that some of those are not good additions, some of those would not be good legislation, some of those if it went through the process of authorizing and appropriating would certainly pass on the floor of this House. I do not say that as a matter of fact some of them would not pass the grant process, but they should have to go through that process.

Why should we just automatically say forget the grant process?

□ 1115

I heard a lecture that indicated if we wait until the bureaucracy gets around to doing these things, nothing ever will happen. Things will happen and they do happen and the public will know as a matter of fact there was close scrutiny but here we have 19 projects, contrary to what I hear, we had a lot of people we heard from, and so forth, we did not have hearings on many of these issues, in depth hearings. Sure we heard from different constituencies, but look at the issues and look at those who signed the letters saying we should vote for it, and look at where the projects go, and I guess we get a pretty good idea of what that support would be. I think it is a bad way to legislate. I think we are trying to improve our image as a legislative body and it is these last minute things that get passed on to other legislation that causes the public to really question our sincerity in doing things through an orderly legislative process.

It would be my hope that we defeat this rule and next year we take up these issues. I do not even care if we do not reauthorize the Taft Institute at this time. There is not one issue here, including the Taft Institute, that is going to cause the ceiling to fall, if as a matter of fact, we do not take immediate action.

We usually think at last minute sessions, as a matter of fact, we are dealing strictly with emergencies, that the end of the world will happen if we do not do something with it. There is not a thing in this bill that will cause things to get better or worse in the next 6 months if we do not take action whatsoever. But it will be much better if we come back in an orderly fashion, have our hearings, go through the authorization process and then the appropriations process and some of these will be successful, some will not, some will not go to the locations where, as a matter of fact, they are geared to go through this process.

Let us defeat the rule and do the things we are supposed to do that we are sent here to do in an orderly fashion.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding, the gentleman who is the ranking minority member of the subcommittee that most of these things would come under.

Have any of these 19 special items that are designated in this bill, have any of the 19 items had a hearing as an item?

Mr. GOODLING. No real hearings.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Bartlett].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in the strongest opposition possible to a rule that is both unfair and strikes at the heart of the process in this House. It seems the appropriate thing in the House is to defeat the rule not because we would defeat bringing up a conference report on its own merits. The Committee on Rules could allow the conference report to come up at any time, but because we would oppose waiving the points of order that would legitimately lie against 19 separate designated items in this bill.

So the rule should be defeated because of the process, and if the rule is passed, and I hope it is not and believe it will not be, then, in fact, the committee can discuss these items on the process.

I would inquire of the gentleman carrying the rule for the committee, whom I respect a great deal, the gentleman from Missouri is carrying the rule for the committee, and I know he was not there yesterday. Could the gentleman enlighten us on exactly what points of order where you would propose that we waive?

Mr. WHEAT. The gentleman is aware there are two basic violations that need waivers in this particular legislation. There are scope waivers, as a result of the additions that were put on in the House after the conference committee came back from the Senate, and there are germaneness waivers that are necessary also.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it the gentleman's contention that those points of order should not be allowed to be made against a bill, since what the gentleman is saying, this bill is clearly out of order of the House rules on at least two points or perhaps others; but for this rule, these items would be subject to a point of order, is that correct?

Mr. WHEAT. Of course the waivers are necessary so that a point of order would not lie, but I think the gentleman recognizes that the contention is, in fact, over the additional items that have been added to the Taft Commission and the opportunity to debate those items is maintained by passing a rule we have proposed before Members.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would further yield to the gentleman to inquire if Members of the Committee on Rules wanted to give the House an opportunity to vote on these items which have never had a hearing or consideration by either the House or the other body, could the Committee on Rules simply bring out a rule that would allow us to vote on those individually?

Mr. WHEAT. I suppose it is possible to craft some kind of a rule that would allow that particular procedure. However, in the waning moments of this session, what we are considering is a conference report that has been considered by both House conferees and Senate conferees, and in their wisdom, this is the particular legislation they brought to the floor and the rule we passed does give full authority to debate the entire scope of the report as it now stands.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is the gentleman aware that the 19 additional items, all 19 save but 2, were added on at the request of an individual member of the conference committee who signed the report? The 2 being 2 other Members from other States, one from the other body and one from the House; is the gentleman aware 17 are in the districts of conferees and except for 2 exceptions, no one else got one of these special projects in the conference report?

Mr. WHEAT. There are a number of items added once the conference report came back to the House that many of these are very worthwhile items, but as to the individual merit of the particular items that were added, I think the appropriate place to discuss those is on the conference report itself.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the additional information and I want to make a couple of additional points in opposing the rule.

First, the House needs to understand that this, the Taft Institute, is merely a $750,000 per year reauthorization of an existing program that has some general level of support in this Congress and, in fact, passed the House. That is $750,000, subsequently without any hearings or without any meetings, without any competition, the conferees of the conference committee took it upon themselves to add 19 individual items. I said 17 earlier, it is actually 16. A third is a reauthorization of a program that was a 1-year program originally authorized 16 items earmarked for an individual's specific district. I do not want Members to come to the House floor and not be aware of the details of these earmarks. For example, there is one that will go, is detailed specifically to the Washington Library Consortium for a facility, new construction, of a particular facility in a particular county in Maryland. There is one for a particular council, $1 million going to a council in a city, Hyde Park, VT. There is another for Voorhees College in Denmark, SC. Another for $2.2 million for the Mississippi Law School. There is $400,000 for the University of Montana, not just for the University of Montana but for a specifically named library.

I urge a "no" vote.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BUSTAMANTE). The Chair has an announcement to make, pursuant to House Resolution 563. The Chair would like to announce the additions to today's schedule of 3 suspensions; H.R. 4210, to reauthorize title II and III of the Marine Protection, Research and Sanctuaries Act of 1972, concur with Senate amendments; a Senate bill or House bill, the omnibus health amendments of 1988; third, a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 159), to correct enrollment of the conference report on H.R. 4174.

WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 4585, TAFT INSTITUTE AUTHORIZATION, AND AGAINST CONSIDERATION OF SUCH CONFERENCE REPORT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN].

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I hope that he misspoke when he said he did not think the rule was controversial because in my opinion this rule is a legislative abomination. This rule is certainly controversial because if it were not for this rule we could save the taxpayers $60 million because we have points of order against $60 million worth of spending that is in this bill.

Now, when this original bill passed the House of Representatives, it cost the taxpayers only $750,000. Now, that is a lot of money, but it was a $750,000 bill. As it now comes back to us, it will cost $66 million. That is an 8,700-percent increase put on in a conference committee. That is not for defense spending, folks, that is an 8,700-percent increase in spending that was dictated by this Congress and by this House.

I tell Members this: Anyone in this Congress who stands up and talks about deficits being someplace other than in Congress and votes for this rule is a hypocrite. Anyone who votes for this rule and says that Congress does not have something to do with deficits is a hypocrite because this particular bill is an 8,700-percent increase in spending brought to Members by the conference committee.

Why? Well, let me go through a few of the items in there. It just happens that there is a $1 million item to a Vermont higher education council. Guess what? There were two Members from Vermont on the conference committee. It just happens there is a $4½ million center in South Carolina; there was a Member from South Carolina on the conference committee. There is a library at the University of Montana. Guess what? A Member from Montana was on the conference committee. There just happens to be another thing for a business center in Montana; that Member was on the conference committee. Another thing for Vermont, a consortium; two Members from the committee were from Vermont. In Pennsylvania, St. Joseph's College thing in there, $5 million; a member on the conference committee was from Pennsylvania. From Massachusetts Corp. for Educational Technology; there was a Senator from Massachusetts on the conference committee. There is a Rocky Mountain State partnership for educational technology that goes to Utah; there was a fellow from Utah on the conference committee. A biotechnology center in there, a bioscience research lab at Montana State University; there was a member of the conference committee, once again, from Montana. A Kentucky Polytech Institute that gets a waiver; a Member from Kentucky on the committee.

Guess where it came from? The conference sat there and divied up $60 million of money that did not pass this House, that was never heard in this House, and I tell Members one thing, this is a disgusting piece of legislation. There is no way that this piece of legislation should come to the floor. No way it shoud be granted waivers under the rule. I tell Members the hypocrisy that goes on. How did they get this through the Rules Committee? It is a sad chapter when the conference committee sat there and decided that one of the things they would put in here is an item for the chairman of the Committee on Rules, so I guess they thought they would get a sympathetic hearing if they just stick in an item for the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Well, I tell you, if ever there was a bill that the taxpayers should be ultimately disgusted with it is this bill. The taxpayers want to know why we have huge deficits in Washington. This bill is the answer, an 8,700-percent increase in spending given to Members who sit on the conference committee for a few of their friends. That is wrong. That is what has gone wrong.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows when the bill passed the House it was to reauthorize the Taft Institute; now it comes back, even renamed, and it is not the same bill. It is now called the Education Priorities for Research and Construction Act. Now, the gentleman knows the rules of the House. Is it not true that all these were nongermane amendments that would not have been adopted on the floor because they would be ruled out of order, is that correct?

Mr. WALKER. That is right. If we go through the bill, virtually every section exceeds scope or is nongermane. Section 201, nongermane; section 301, 302, nongermane. 304, nongermane; 305, nongermane; 306 exceeds scope; 307 exceeds scope; 309 exceeds scope; 310 exceeds scope. Section 312 exceeds scope; section 313, exceeds scope; section 314, exceeds scope.

All of this could have been knocked out, $60 million knocked out if not for the rule. Any Member who votes for the rule is saying we ought not to have the right to knock out the $60 million in spending.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Is this the old game the other body plays all the time, putting amendments on our bills that go over there, and we are supposed to swallow real hard, but it goes further, to the conference committee? Some of our own membership picked up the virus by getting theirs in also.

Mr. WALKER. It is disgusting and ought to be voted down overwhelmingly.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm, because I am confused by this debate. Is it true that this bill, when it left the House, was a very tiny bill that affected only the Taft Institute and was about $700,000? Is that the case? I ask either side.

I will be glad to yield to the distinguished Member of the Committee on Rules.

□ 1130

Mr. WHEAT. That is my understanding.

Mr. GINGRICH. We could not hear you.

Mr. WHEAT. That is my understanding of what the bill contained when it left the House.

Mr. GINGRICH. When the bill left the House we had a tiny good government, $700,000 Taft Institute. It came back then as I understand it as the perfect model for the Taft Institute to study how Congress becomes a pork farm. More little piglets have been put in this veto bait than any bill proportionate. I suspect this may be the all-time "Guinness Book of Records" for how much a bill grew in conference as the pork farmers gathered.

Now I would hope first of all that every Member who has a shred of decency, who has gone home and said they like the line-item veto and said they wanted a balanced budget amendment, I hope every Member who feels that way will vote "no" on the rule, defeat the rule and insist that this group go back to conference, weed out all of the little pigs and bring us back a Taft Institute bill.

Second, I would hope that every Member who has any claim to going back home and claiming they are a fiscal conservative will vote "no" both on the rule and on the bill and will urge the President to veto this turkey—if one can have pigs and a turkey—and recognize that this is a travesty for us to be standing around piously pledging our concern about the deficit except when a little herd of pigs come rushing through from the conference.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I have gotten some flack by calling things "pork" from my pork producers so I am not going to continue the analogy.

Mr. GINGRICH. I apologize to your honest pork farmers.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I agree with the gentleman's thrust of the gentleman's remarks and the remarks are that this is the proverbial tail wagging the dog. In fact, we can hardly see the dog the tail is so big.

And the fact is the gentleman is absolutely right. What the conferees are doing, because they are going in and splurging themselves on all of this that they are asking us to swallow today, is to jeopardize the Taft reauthorization. Here it is, the Taft reauthorization is an attempt to bring to high school students and college students and others who teach these youngsters the political process and the legislative process. And to do this on this bill is the height of irony and is disgusting, frankly, in how it was done. So, the gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that not all the conferees signed this report. I think if the gentleman checks, if I am not wrong, I think the chairman of the committee did not sign this report, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

Mr. GINGRICH. That is exactly correct.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. There is some point when we cannot swallow this stuff any longer. In order to get to this, let us defeat the rule, let us defeat the rule.

Mr. GINGRICH. That is exactly right.

One further thing, and that is this in its current form is a bill which places politics above consideration.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE].

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this rule for all the reasons we have just heard on this floor. This rule waives all points of order on the conference report to the Taft Institute reauthorization and does not allow a motion to recommit. We are talking about a bill that has grown from a relatively simple $750,000 authorization to $60 million. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania indicated, an 8,700-percent increase.

Now, I know we are famous around here for having some gargantuan sideshow freaks grow out of almost nothing, but this has got to top it all.

What we are seeing today is a greased pig running around on the floor.

It appears that a few Members of the other body, with the help of some on this side, were able to tackle this little pig and managed quite a game of pin the pork on the pig to the tune of $60 million.

You have heard some of those specific items addressed, the $2.2 million for a law library at the University of Mississippi, $7.5 million for the Washington Library Consortium, $4.5 million for a health and human resources center in South Carolina. The list goes on and on.

If any of these are worthy of support, and I am not sure whether they are or not since we have not had hearings on them. But if they are worthy of support, they will stand the test of the hearings, authorization, and appropriations process in the next Congress. They should be able to stand the peer review and competitive grant process that any other university project has to withstand.

What we are seeing is business as usual. The only difference is we do not have a continuing resolution this year. So, we have to find something to replace the continuing resolution.

Mr. Speaker, we have found it here today with this. The Taft Institute bill is the legislation that is going to be this year's continuing resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I urge defeat of the rule and of the conference report.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, if this were not so pitiful it would be funny. We have a little bill that left the House at a tiny amount and to the astonishment of everyone, that bill has grown 90 times. Now the reason that we are astonished is not that it has grown 90 times larger, it is what restrained the managers of the conference committee that they did not let it grow 100 times larger, because that is the size of their normal appetite around here. And it is perhaps less surprising that the chief manager on the part of the House could not bring himself to sign the conference report. I think that speaks volumes about that gentleman's good sense.

What is going to be the net result here is that the House is going to push this through under a rule, probably going to pass it, it is going to go down and get vetoed. And so the party that is going to be hurt, the injured party is going to be the Taft Institute which is exactly the beneficiary that we all intended to help when we passed the bill the first time.

So an item that is not controversial because of the greed and piggishness of individual Members of our Congress is going to be the one that falls by the wayside.

And what that does, Mr. Speaker, is to describe the House and Senate to the people of the United States in terms far more stark than probably has been done anytime this year. Here is a group who cannot keep their fingers out of the taxpayers' money for their own personal chauvinistic greed.

I think the people of the United States will be watching this vote. I think it will be reported rather widely about the country in an awful lot of congressional districts as to how their Representative voted on the major item of greed in the 100th very historical Congress.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS], the chairman of the Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Let us see if we can cut through the histrionics and the hysterics this morning.

My friends and colleagues on the other side have made it sound as if this is the most egregious piece of legislation to come before the House this year and somehow this rule is a great violation of the procedures of the House, that this rule is somehow extraordinary, that we normally do not pass rules like this on conference committee reports.

This bill has gone through the normal legislative process. This bill is not an appropriations bill. Nothing is being funded with this bill. We are not allowing the expenditure of a single dollar of Federal money with this bill. But we are in the waning hours of this session trying to authorize for the consideration of this House and the Committee on Appropriations of this House, whether or not to appropriate money for certain education items which have been asked for time and time again by many of our constituents, some of whom traveled here to Washington, DC, to ask for many of the items in this bill.

I show the opponents of this rule these hearing reports, an example of the hearing process that preceded the items that are being objected to in this bill.

I only say that so that my colleagues will know that it was not just a few members of the conference committee between the House and the Senate who decided that their districts needed some additional spending and those are the items in this bill reflecting the districts represented by the members of the conference committee. Those who have said that on the other side are incorrect.

Let me read to my colleagues a list of those States that will receive the authorization for some education assistance if this bill is accepted and signed into law. And these States had no representatives on the conference committee that put this bill together.

Florida, Kansas, New Jersey, Oregon, Colorado, Wyoming, Nevada, Alaska, Idaho, Washington, Virginia, and Mississippi. And then our friends from Guam and the Marianas and American Samoa also.

No one from any of those States or territories or commonwealths had a member on the conference committee that put this bill together. And those of us on the conference committee—and I, as chairman of that conference committee—really resent the implication that somehow the members of the conference committee really only are lining the pockets in their own districts.

That simply is not true. We took items which had been asked for by the American people, either directly or through their associations of which they are members, groups and individuals who came to Washington, DC, and testified in favor of these kinds of authorizations.

But let us keep our eyes on the prize, though; that is that this bill reauthorizes the Taft Institute. Some have said this was a good and simple bill when it left the House. And I agree that it was both good and simple. But unless my colleagues misunderstand, I do want you to know that when this bill left the House, it did so with the recommendation of the Secretary of Education that the President of the United States veto this good and simple bill. And since the bill has come back from the Senate, the new Secretary of Education has sent this chairman a letter again saying that "It is the opinion of the Department of Education that the Taft Institute should not be reauthorized."

So my friends, if we face a veto threat, which we do, it is not because of the additions of the educational efforts that have been put onto this bill. It is because the Department of Education does not believe the Taft Institute should be reauthorized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, are any of these 19 grants that are specified in this bill, are any of them in the gentleman's district or in the State of Montana, by name?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are items in my district, in Pennsylvania and California, in Vermont, Kentucky, Massachusetts, and Maryland and these represent States that had members on our conference committee. However, more States, the ones that I read earlier, which did not have representatives on our conference committee, are included in this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman further yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me reclaim my time. Because we are in the waning hours of today and of this session, I want to yield in a moment, yield back the balance of my time to the manager of this bill for the Committee on Rules, and simply say to my colleagues this is simply the rule. This is not the bill and the debate—and it is a good debate—should proceed on the bill itself. But I urge my colleagues to vote for this rule, give us an opportunity to go to debate on the bill itself, which will immediately follow and then, if necessary, we can vote on the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would question my friend and dear associate from Montana whether or not the various pieces that are included in this legislation are something that we have looked to place in a particular piece of legislation for an extended period of time and simply have not been able to find something that was conducive to carrying forth these types of legislation? And more particularly, I am a little bit concerned that the quality of the things that we are doing in this bill are being overlooked in its entirety. The legislation that we have is very important and goes in a lot of different areas toward trying to improve the overall educational situation across this great country. It does it in specific ways. It does it in a fashion that is perhaps piecemeal, but certainly it contributes to the whole.

□ 1145

Mr. Speaker, I think that the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] should be commended for the work that he has done on this legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's comments.

In answer to the gentleman's question as to whether or not the House had attempted to move many of the items in this legislation in other legislation, the answer is, yes. We were going to attempt that in some of these necessary items in the library construction bill, we attempted that in the trade bill, and now we are at the year end so we have a few of these items remaining and we are putting them on this bill.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote to support the rule because I think Members should have a right to vote on this issue. But I rise today in support of BILL FRENZEL and BOB WALKER on this issue. I believe they are right.

Let me tell the Members why, as a Democrat. My area lost more jobs than anybody else in the country, and every time the Appropriations Committee looked at something on my side of the avenue, they just do not have the money. Well, Mr. Speaker, here is a guy in Congress who is saying, "The ball stops right here with a Democrat who is saying we want some fairness."

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I am not going to yield.

The gentleman is a very good friend of mine, but I will not yield.

I vote 99 percent of the time with the Democrats. I give all my support to them. I want this rule to pass because I think Members should vote this thing down. I think the message should be quite clear. We need an equitable system to take care of the problems in America.

I have poor people, and we need housing. I lost 55,000 jobs in the last 10 years, and no one down here really cares. If you want to add this pork, this is one Democrat who is saying that he stands with BOB WALKER and BILL FRENZEL. I am going to vote for this rule.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, we are against the rule.

Mr. TRAFICANT. I know the gentleman is against the rule. I am going to vote for the rule and vote against the bill.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule, and I do so because the bill goes beyond the scope of conference to include 60 million dollar's worth of legislative add-ons.

The original intent of H.R. 4585 was to reauthorize the Taft Institute—an educational institute designed to enhance understanding of the legislative process through seminars and forums. However, this original intent has become buried under by millions of dollars of new authorizations.

Nineteen new programs have been added to the Taft bill and earmarked for 60 million dollar's worth of funding. While some of this money has already been appropriated, close to $41 million has not. It is simply inappropriate to authorize vast sums of money without first allowing the committee to review and determine the effective and worth of the programs. If these programs are worthwhile, they will stand the test of the appropriate legislative process next year.

In this time of fiscal austerity, this Congress, in good conscience, simply cannot support 60 million dollar's worth of earmarks. The Labor-HHS appropriations bill has already been signed by the President and conforms with the guidelines set forth by Gramm-Rudman. Now is not the time to authorize further funding.

Next year, this body will have the opportunity to adequately review the legislation included in this bill. Then will be the proper time to determine the merit of these programs, not now when projects are disguised and buried in another bill.

I urge my colleagues to vote no to this bill.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to amplify on the comments of the gentleman from Ohio. If we are truly against this bill and against this process, we kill the snake right here on the rule. We do not have to go past this point. We can send this back to conference. The fact is that a lot of this junk was put on another bill called the White House Conference of Libraries and the conferees had the backbone to say, "Don't put this stuff on our bill. We want a bill that is passed and signed by the President."

So all this stuff was taken off. The House can act right now and force the conferees to take this stuff off, go back to conference, and send out a clean bill. That is the way it should be. We can do it, and we ought to do it on the rule. If we are really against this process, everybody except for a handful who got something on this ought to stand up and say, "We are gagging on this. This is too much, and we are not going to do it."

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] again. I heard the gentleman say that in his opinion there had been hearings on these 19 subjects. I serve on the same committee, and I do not recall a single hearing. I want to clarify it. Perhaps the gentleman meant that there were hearings generically on similar subjects.

Has there been a hearing on whether to waive the competitive grant process for a competitive application that was applied for and did not make the cut for the Rocky Mountain station partnership education technology, for $3.5 million, which this bill would waive the competition for a grant that it already had lost in the competition? Has there been a hearing on that particular grant application or on any other grant application?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, there have been many hearings generically on the need for these items, and if the gentleman will permit me to continue for 15 seconds, we can wait on this.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Why does the gentleman not answer the question? We only have a couple of minutes left. The question can be answered yes or no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield to me later, then?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Obviously the gentleman does not want to answer the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Bustamante). The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Coleman] has expired.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Williams].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, this is not a court of law, and none of the gentlemen on the other side are attorneys or judges forcing a person being asked a question to answer yes or no and then quickly get out of town. I think I have a right to try to answer the question.

The answer is, "yes," there have been hearings on the necessity of the help that is here for training teachers, on the new facilities that are necessary here, on the absolutely essential nature of the new biotech science research facilities.

Now, we can wait perhaps for years until unelected, unnamed bureaucrats down at the Department of Education make the decision as to where and if we are going to go ahead and fund and authorize these things, and once they make that decision, it will be considered Solomon-like and reflecting their wisdom. But if the House of Representatives does it, it is considered "pork."

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stenholm].

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind all the Members of the body that this day is a perfect example of why we introduced the truth-in-legislating bill just a few days ago.

What we ought to be doing is voting on each individual one of these projects today. We should not be asked to vote for a rule that waives the kind of discussion that should go into the merits.

The gentleman from Montana [Mr. Williams], I would assume, is correct that every single one of these projects is entirely deserving and has been well heard and is totally deserving of the support of this body. But for no reason should ever be asked to vote, especially at a time when we all talk about deficits, to waive the rules in the last few seconds of the 100th Congress in order that this might be done in an expedited manner.

This is going to be a perfect example for each and every one of us to say we are sincere about deficits and we are sincere about the process of this House of Representatives. Let us say "no" to this rule and send it back to conference. Let us vote on these items on their individual merits in the proper process of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Members to vote no on this rule if they are sincere about deficits in any shape, form, or fashion.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as I close I want the Members to be clear about what our situation is.

I know those who have been listening to the debate for the last 45 minutes or so may think we have exhausted the debate over the substance of this matter. Mr. Speaker, we have not. What we have been debating is the rule, and should this rule pass, and when this rule passes—and there is nothing unusual about this rule for a conference report—we will still have an opportunity to debate the Taft Institute and the associated education items that have been included with it, and if at that time there are Members who oppose the Taft Institute or who oppose the education improvements that have been included with the Taft Institute, they will still have every opportunity to register their opposition to the Taft Institute and those amendments.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHEAT. No, I will not yield at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a perfectly legitimate rule. The matter before us needs to be debated thoroughly and fully. This rule gives us the opportunity to do that.

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, while I am only in my first term, I have already become acutely aware of some of the pure, unadulterated "pork" this body lets slip through in the waning days of a Congress.

A perfect example is the conference report on H.R. 4585.

When this bill was passed by the House earlier this year, it was a simple reauthorization of the Taft Institute at $750,000. I supported the bill, as did most of our colleagues.

But, when this simple, unassuming little bill came back from the other body, and from consideration by the conference on H.R. 4585, it changed—from Dr. Jekyll into Mr. Hyde.

The other body added 19 new special projects to benefit various districts at a cost to the hardworking American taxpayer of almost $60 million.

Now I know it is an election year, and most Members get brownie points from their constituents for "bringing home the bacon," but this example of pork barrel spending is outrageous.

It is important to look out for our districts, but I believe a higher good is to work to reduce spending and force the Federal Government to live within its means. We are approaching the sequestration point, and Members should be aware of every item calling for the expenditure of more tax dollars.

Rarely do we have an opportunity to vote "no" on pure pork. For the good of the taxpayers, oppose this conference report and demand the conferees send back a "clean" bill without the pork.

Remember, the taxpayers of your district are watching.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, we often talk about the importance of educational opportunity for all young people. We talk about cooperative efforts to encourage private sector development of programs that promote quality higher education that is within reach of all talented young men and women, regardless of their economic background. We talk about reclaiming our cities by providing avenues of growth within reach of our urban youth.

Today, I have the opportunity to speak in favor of a program that combines all of these elements.

Seton Hall University, with its main campus in South Orange, NJ, and its school of law, located in Newark, has a long tradition of service within the inner-city community.

Each year, more than 16,000 persons in need of legal counsel are aided by the school's clinics for legal services, family law and juvenile justice. The school operates one of the first bilingual clinics in the United States, serving the more than 125,000 Hispanics residing in the Newark area.

Seton Hall recently reaffirmed its commitment to the inner city and disadvantaged population, by seeking to establish a clinical law center to expand its educational opportunities for students and its services within the community.

I believe that support for the conference report on H.R. 4585 is a vote of confidence for Msgr. John J. Petillo, Seton Hall's chancellor, and for his dedicated staff and faculty, who have created a program that serves as a model for academic involvement and community service.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 131, nays 256, not voting 44, as follows:

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS TO FILE REPORT ENTITLED "COMBATTING FRAUD, ABUSE, AND MISCONDUCT IN THE NATION'S FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS"

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Government Operations may have until 6 p.m. today to file a report entitled "Combatting Fraud, Abuse, and Misconduct in the Nation's Financial Institutions."

Mr. Speaker, this request has the support of the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BUSTAMANTE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON STANDARDS OF OFFICIAL CONDUCT TO TAKE TESTIMONY AND RECEIVE EVIDENCE BY A QUORUM OF ONE UNTIL THE END OF THE 100TH CONGRESS

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that for the period from October 13, 1988, to the end of the second session of the 100th Congress the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct be permitted to take testimony and receive evidence by a quorum of one of its members, the provisions of House rule XI, clause 2(h)(1), notwithstanding.

The request has been approved by the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly shall not object, I do so for the purpose of yielding to the gentleman from California to briefly explain this matter.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I would like to thank the ranking member of the Ethics Committee for his cooperation in this matter.

As the gentleman well knows, the fact is that we will be conducting investigations from the sine die adjournment until we come back in January. This will allow us to sit as a committee of one for depositions and other purposes which will expedite our investigations and certainly accommodate the schedules of Members more adequately.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, during sine die this is an absolute necessity. I certainly support it and the minority does also.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. pro tempore. It there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR A MOTION TO TAKE H.R. 4416, TITLES V AND VI AUTHORIZATION OF LIBRARY SERVICES AND CONSTRUCTION ACT, FROM THE SPEAKER'S TABLE, WITH A SENATE AMENDMENT, AND CONCUR IN THE SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 586 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 586

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House, without intervening motion, a motion to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 4416) to extend the authorization of appropriations for title V and VI of the Library Services and Construction Act through fiscal year 1989, together with the Senate amendment thereto, and to concur in the Senate amendment. Said amendment shall be considered as having been read. Debate on the motion shall continue not to exceed one hour, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the motion to final adoption without intervening motion.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TAYLOR], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 586 provides for the consideration of H.R. 4416, the authorization for titles V and VI of the Library Services and Construction Act. The rule provides for a motion to take from the Speaker's table the bill H.R. 4416 with the Senate amendment and to concur in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment will be considered as having been read and the rule provides for 1 hour of debate on the motion.

Mr. Speaker, in early June this year, the House passed this bill by voice vote on suspension.

But, the bill only extended the authorization for titles V and VI through fiscal year 1989. The measure we are voting on today is meant to return those titles to the same authorization schedule as applies to the rest of the titles of the act.

Title V authorizes the Secretary of Education to make grants to State and local public libraries for the acquisition of foreign language materials. Title VI authorizes the Secretary to make grants for supporting literacy programs.

In early October of this year, the Senate passed H.R. 4416 with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. That substitute, in addition to including the authorization extension contained in the House-passed version, also authorized the appropriation of $5 million for fiscal year 1989 and each succeeding year through fiscal year 1993 for the establishment of a program of national geography studies centers to be administered by the National Geographic Society.

The Senate version also authorizes $10 million for each of fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991 and $15 million for each of fiscal years 1992 and 1993 for the U.S. Institute of Peace.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of this rule and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 586 is a rule under which the House will be asked to authorize $60 million in appropriations for the Institute of Peace over the next 5 years. There will be no opportunity for House amendments.

Under this rule, a motion will be made to take the bill, H.R. 4416, with a Senate amendment from the Speaker's table and to concur in the Senate amendment.

This rule restricts the right of Members to reduce the authorization bill and to shorten the authorization period or to make any change whatsoever in the Senate amendment.

Mr. Speaker, when the Committee on Rules met yesterday, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] asked for the opportunity to offer two simple amendments. He was turned down.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] reminded us that the House has had no opportunity thus far in the 100th Congress to consider a routine authorization bill for the U.S. Peace Institute. It seems to me this is not an emergency situation. Given the fact that we will be in session next week and perhaps beyond, there is simply no good reason to deny Members of this House the right to offer amendments.

This rule is unfair. It is unfair to the gentleman from New York. It is unfair to the Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to defeat this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I have no quarrel with the Library Services Act which passed this House overwhelmingly and passed this House with my vote, because it was a good piece of legislation. I do, however, have a quarrel with the bill in its present form as it was sent back here with Senate amendments, which has added in the reauthorization of the Peace Institute for a 5-year period, with an increase of 300 percent over the last 5-year authorizations.

This last fiscal year the Peace Institute was authorized to expend $4,300,000. This legislation today raises that expenditure from $4,300,000 up to $10 million for this coming year and for the 2 successive years after that, and to $15 million for the fourth and fifth years. That totals $60 million, instead of approximately $15 million that was spent in the last 5 years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I appeared before the Rules Committee and told them that we had not had the opportunity to debate this issue on the merits, nor had we had the opportunity to debate the amount of money that we were going to spend on this Peace Institute.

I have to remind all of you that I am the ranking Republican on the Veterans' Affairs Committee of this House. I would hope that all of you would contact your veterans hospitals back in each one of your districts. It does not matter which one of those 172 hospitals it is, whether it is in California, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Florida, or New York. You will find that on the average in every single one of those hospitals that there is a shortfall today of an average of $4 million in medical care delivery to the veterans of this Nation.

I have been trying, along with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY], your Democratic chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, to shake loose some kind of a dire supplemental to make up some of the difference in this shortfall for these hospitals, because if you place that call as I am asking you to do right now your hospital director will tell you that they are turning veterans away who need medical care today.

Now, this House just defeated a rule of 60 million dollars' worth of pork barrel. This is nothing more than the same. This is another $60 million of pork barrel. That is $120 million that we can save here today that we could use on those veterans' hospitals.

I am not here to argue the merits of the Peace Institute, whether that is good or bad, but I would like the opportunity to go back to the Rules Committee and to ask them to put in order my amendment, which simply funds the Peace Institute at the same amount of money that we spent during this present fiscal year, $4,300,000. That is not very much to ask. The administration has not asked for this additional expenditure. The Peace Institute has not asked for it, nor have we had a chance to debate this issue on the floor of this House, or even in committee.

So Mr. Speaker, let us do what is right for the veterans of this Nation.

Let us defeat this rule. We will bring the bill on the floor. We will pass the Library Services Act, as we all want to do, and we will fund again the Peace Institute, but we will do it at the same level that we spent last year, which is simply what they are asking for.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that we could defeat the rule and have that opportunity.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Glickman].

□ 1230

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule. I rise in support of it not only because it has such a significant amount of authorization for our libraries in this country supported all over this country in every congressional district, but also because it does contain the reauthorization of the U.S. Institute of Peace.

The Institute of Peace was originally authorized as a part of the 1983 defense authorization bill, largely through the help of folks like the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Aspin], Senator Nunn, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Gingrich], and others who believed that in addition to having a defense establishment able to provide a method to prevent war, we also needed a system of conflict-resolution techniques in this country to try to determine ways to prevent war in a nonmilitary focus. That institute has been operating for 5 years. President Reagan has supported it and has appointed its President and its Board of Directors, and while it has not done everything that I wanted to see it doing, it has done a great deal in connection with education programs at universities around this country, seminars, fellowships, and articles to try to teach people in the business world, in the military, and in all sectors of our society ways to avoid war through the nonmilitary context.

The Reagan administration recently appointed as the president of the Peace Institute Ambassador Sam Lewis, Ambassador to Israel under both Presidents Carter and Reagan, and he appointed Ambassador Lewis because President Reagan believed the Peace Institute needed somebody at its helm, somebody most experienced in resolving conflicts in a nonmilitary context, and because of Ambassador Lewis' background in the Camp David peace accords, he decided Sam Lewis was the man for the job. The Institute has enjoyed bipartisan support since its creation, and Congress has already appropriated $6.9 million for the Institute's 1989 budget, and I respect my colleague from New York, and he made the same case in the Committee on Rules yesterday, but it is important to realize two things, that this is a reauthorization of the Peace Institute with no substantive changes for all practical purposes. I think he acknowledges that. The dollars are authorized at a higher level, but the Congress has appropriated, the House and the Senate, in the subcommittee of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Natcher], and in the relevant subcommittee $6.9 million for the Institute's 1989 budget.

Therefore, regardless of the authorization for this year, the appropriation has already been handled at a lower level, and that is what will take place.

This funding of $6.9 million is a tiny fraction of the funding we spend in preparation for war. I happen to be one who votes for military budgets, who votes for defense systems, who votes for practically everything we need to service our Nation's veterans. We have one of the finest veterans' hospitals in America in my congressional district, and $6.9 million for ways to prevent a nuclear war in the nonmilitary context, ways to train soldiers, ways to train business people, is really just a small amount.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge that this is a library bill. As a part of the library bill which reauthorizes library function in every congressional district in America, it also includes a very small sum to reauthorize an existing program, not a new program, and I would urge the vote of the Members in favor of the rule.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, let me just say that many of us have worked long and hard on the establishment of a Peace Institute, originally discussing it as a Peace Academy.

When we were able to achieve development of a Peace Institute, I think we made a very significant step forward.

The question of whether we are able to study conflict resolution by peaceful means was one that led a lot of us to push for this kind of concept. We spend a great deal of money, and properly should, to analyze how we must fight, how we must conduct wars if in fact we are pulled into a war, God forbid, but we spend almost no money and no time trying, in an organized way, to understand how can we resolve conflicts peacefully. Is there a potential to resolve conflicts peacefully short of war, and this is a study of that.

The Peace Institute, I think, is a very important step forward. It is a very small step, but I share the gentleman's plea to the Members of the House of Representatives that this is not something new, and I think the gentleman from New York understands that. This is not new. This reauthorizes something we have done. It is small, but very, very important, and I hope Members of the House will understand that and help us move along by reauthorizing in this bill.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I would say a couple of things: President Reagan has appointed all of the directors and president of this organization, and the administration does not support this Institute of Peace at all, and I think it is appropriate in a President who has addressed defense needs so strongly that he has also gone on record in support of methods to resolve conflicts in a nonmilitary context as well. That is a credit to Ronald Reagan.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support of this rule. Again, the main part of this rule is the library reauthorization throughout America.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Walker].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Let me say just briefly that the gentleman from Kansas is one of the Members I admire and respect in this body, as is the gentleman from North Dakota.

We do not question the merits of this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out that I thank the gentleman for his comments about our great President Ronald Reagan. Ronald Reagan has sometimes been a little spendthrift, too, and has spent a little more than I would like.

Let me make the point that we are talking about only a $4 or $5 million increase which is, like, 200 percent for this year.

I want the Members to go back and just check with my hospital in Albany, NY, and in the gentleman's hospital in Kansas, and right now the veterans are being turned away for prescription drugs. They are over budget. They do not have the money.

It is not $1 million here and there, but as Everett Dirksen once said, "Now we talk a billion here and a billion there."

We need to save this $60 million here today, the $60 million, and before we adjourn next Wednesday, we are going to get a supplemental budget for the veterans' hospitals of this Nation one way or the other. We will not do it by pushing over more budgets that are over budget just like this one here is today.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a couple of points here. A couple of minutes ago the House did the right thing. We turned down $60 million in pork.

We ought to now take a look at what we are doing here. The library services bill that passed this House passed overwhelmingly, and for anyone to get up and suggest that anyone is opposed to bringing library services back here as a clean bill and passing that is just completely wrong. There is no question about that bill.

What the question is is this add-on provision. We heard from the proponents of this add-on provision that this is a matter that is simply reauthorization.

First of all, the House never authorized this program. We have never had a debate on this program in the House of Representatives. We have never agreed to this program. It has always been a Senate program that has been sent over here in some form.

Last year when we did finally focus in on this program on one appropriation bill, I would remind the House that this House struck the money for this Institute in an appropriation bill last year.

Ultimately the Senate prevailed and put the money back in, but the only time that the House has really focused on this particular provision or this particular program, we struck the money completely for it, and now it comes back here on a bill that adds $60 million over and above what was in the library services bill that originated in this House.

Mr. Speaker, all I am suggesting is that once again the House needs to understand that we are setting priorities. We are allowing the Senate to bring a bill back here that this House does not and has never focused on and has never authorized, and we are supposed to accept, lock, stock, and barrel, the funding amounts that the Senate has put into this bill.

It seems to me to be a wrong course of action to take, because no disservice to the library services bill, I hope we can pass the library services bill as a clean bill. That is exactly the right thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, it is wrong for this House to go on accepting millions and millions and millions and millions and millions of dollars in extra spending that we do not need to have on this floor.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my friend, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I understand the argument proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Speaker, let me offer another perspective, if I might. We spend a lot of money on defense in this country, and properly should spend money to defend America. However, if we analyze what we spend on defense on a 24-hour basis, 365 days a year, and then understand what we are talking about with respect to the Peace Institute investments, we are talking about 10 to 20 minutes worth of defense expenditures, only 10 to 20 minutes worth of defense expenditures, would fund the entire Peace Institute budget for a year on ways for us to study conflict resolution by peaceful means.

It seems to me that this is an invaluable sort of thing for us to be involved in, and I would hope that we would pay heed to the message by the gentleman from Kansas and continue what we have already started; that is, continue the development and authorization of the Peace Institute that is now under way and serving this country so well. It's no less an investment in national security than spending on needed weapons. Both are needed to prevent the loss of peace and freedom. All I'm saying is that we need a little better balance.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I think that as we consider this vote, it is well that we come to the realization that this is a tremendous increase in the funding for the Peace Institute. It is an increase that they have not even asked for, and I think that it is ill-advised to take this Senate amendment and, at a time when we are worried about the fiscal responsibility of our country and our two Presidential candidates will be on television tonight deploring this huge deficit, it is important for us to realize it does not happen in the White House, it happens here, and this is a good instance of it. It goes far beyond what the Peace Institute asked for.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is another irresponsible vote for big spending, and I would hope that we will defeat the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out that this is not an increase. It keeps the authorization at the same level, $10 million, for the next 3 years. It does increase it in 1992 and 1993, but for the next 3 years, it stays at the same authorized level of $10 million; and in addition to that, Members ought to be aware that the Committee on Appropriations has not appropriated that $10 million. As I recall, the figure was somewhere in the neighborhood of $6 million. Keep that in mind as we think about this issue.

I recommend the rule highly and the bill eventually when we get to it on another day.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRES). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 250, nays 118, not voting 63, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRES). The Chair announces the following additional suspensions may be considered this afternoon, in debate only, at some time: S. 1727, the Deafness Institute Authorization; S. 59, the Nevada Wilderness Authorization; S. 1985, the Protection and Management of Archaeological Reserves on Federal Land; and S. 2843, the Animal Drug and Patent Term Restoration Act.

WELCOMING THE ASTRONAUTS OF THE SHUTTLE "DISCOVERY"

(Mr. ROE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I am here to welcome the five members of our shuttle Discovery astronauts who are with us today.

Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct honor and a high privilege for me to welcome the crew of the 26th space shuttle mission.

Discovery's spectacular mission is a proclamation of America's leadership. This momentous event marked the culmination of 32 months of dedicated work on the part of thousands. It demonstrates the resiliency of the American spirit, and the strength of this Nation's commitment to a bold space program.

America intends to lead the world into the space destiny of the 21st century. Our four compass points for the task ahead must be science, space, technology, and education. The successful Discovery mission reestablishes firmly a crucial part of our infrastructure to take us into that future.

We are hard at work building the other components that are necessary for the Nation's balanced long-term space effort. We will have a mixed fleet of launch vehicles to provide diversity and strength to our launch capability. We are developing a commercial space launch industry that will compete for a growing share of the world's commercial space market.

We will operate the free world's permanently manned space station with our international partners. The space station will be a workshop of international cooperation. It will be a symbol of international agreement. It will be mankind's stepping stone to the further reaches of our solar system.

We will continue to enhance and expand our space science program. We will launch the magnificent equipment already assembled to plot the stars and probe the planets. We will plan ambitious new space science missions to continue on.

We will do all of this and more because America's citizens support American leadership in space. Thousands stood shoulder to shoulder along the causeway to the Kennedy Space Center to watch Discovery's lift off. Millions more repeated the launch countdown in front of their television sets. On the morning of September 29, America registered its affirmation of continuing space leadership. This afternoon Members of the House of Representatives have the great good fortune to be able to thank Dicovery's crew in person for a job well done.

Mr. Speaker, the Discovery astronauts.

Mr. Speaker, for other words of welcome to our guests who are here today, I would now defer to our distinguished Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I think all of us on both sides of the aisle, Democrats and Republicans, Americans all, are proud of the crew of the space shuttle because they put a smile back on America's face. They have demonstrated that working together with a common goal, we can achieve anything we set our minds and hearts to achieve, anything we give our priority to because this Nation of ours is not finished.

I remember, as do a few others in this Chamber, a day in 1961 when John Fitzgerald Kennedy, speaking here in the Chamber, said that we will have a man on the moon by 1970. Nobody knew how it could be done. The sheer audacity of the challenge arrested us and drove us to do the things together that made it come true.

Many other things have come true. Our new frontier is the space that surrounds the planet Earth. These astronauts are our frontiersmen. They work with a magnificent team composed of thousands of trained specialists who have given their lives to achieving this goal that man, placed here on the Earth, surrounded by the stratosphere, the atmosphere and the troposphere and the limitless bounds of space, may, with God's help, achieve mastery of that space.

To say, as some have said, that science has become our God is to miss the point that science is of God, who created the physical laws of the universe in the first place, who put the electricity in the storm clouds, who locked the Promethean power of the Sun in the tiniest of atoms and who suspended this planet in illimitable space.

So we salute today these splendid young Americans, so exemplary of the best that is in our society, and we pledge that what they have achieved will only be a harbinger of what we will achieve.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. Nelson of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say to the crew of Discovery and to our space team across this Nation, you have lifted our spirits and you have lifted the spirits of America. You have given us cause to look forward, not backward, you have given us a time for hope. And in the wars that we engage in here in the very difficult times of the fiscal austerity and budgetary cutbacks, you also with your success and putting the smile on the face of America, as the Speaker spoke, have given us a pause to look to the future and our future commitments, our future fiscal commitments for this Nation as we fulfill the destiny of what people want in this country, and that is excellence as we explore outer space.

Mr. ROE. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. LUJAN].

Mr. LUJAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, to the astronauts today how very proud we are of them. We were beginning to wonder whether we would ever be back in space again, we were all anxious. Certainly you took those anxieties away from us when you so beautifully swept into space.

Yesterday we had a resolution on this floor commending you for your excellent work, yourselves, the five of you, your fellow astronauts, the thousands of NASA employees and all of the people who have worked on the space program.

You are doing the work that needs to be done, doing the work of America, you are doing the space research.

We all believe and we all know that that will be the workplace of tomorrow.

So again, congratulations to all of you. You have done a superb job and thank you very much.

WE WELCOME OUR HERO ASTRONAUTS

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to join the chairman of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology in welcoming the astronauts here today. They are certainly heroes throughout America because they have put America back in space. Many of us believe because America is back in space that America is back.

The Speaker spoke of teamwork. We in Congress must be a part of that team. It is the commitment that we show here toward our space program that will continue to allow our space program to fly.

So as we welcome the astronauts here today, I hope we also focus on the future because their future in flight is dependent upon the future that we help define for them.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Wylie, the ranking minority member, concurs in this request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZATION FOR TITLES V AND VI OF LIBRARY SERVICES AND CONSTRUCTION ACT, FISCAL YEAR 1989

(b) Section 1707(f)(2) of the United States Institute of Peace Act (22 U.S.C. 4606(f)(2)) is amended by striking out the first sentence thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to approve the amendments that came over to us from the Senate. I do not believe we have any further requests for time on this side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today we are considering H.R. 4416 as amended by the Senate.

H.R. 4416 does three things. It reauthorizes titles V and VI of the Library Services and Construction Act through fiscal year 1989. It authorizes a new program of national geography studies centers through fiscal year 1993. And it reauthorizes the U.S. Institute of Peace through fiscal year 1993.

The House passed this bill on June 7 as a 1-year extension of titles V and VI of the Library Act. These titles authorized grants for the acquisition of foreign language materials and grants to support literacy programs. This extension was needed to bring these two titles of LSCA into conformity with the other four titles of the act. By doing this, we will have the entire act expire at the same time during the next Congress. And it will make our reauthorization review of this act a smoother process.

When H.R. 4416 reached the Senate, that body added two important amendments. The first amendment would authorize a new program of national geography studies centers. Recently, there have been reports criticizing the lack of understanding that American students have of the world community in which we live. Our students have a very poor knowledge of geography. This new program addresses that problem. It would authorize the establishment of national geography studies centers to support geography programs for elementary and secondary school students. It would also provide teacher retraining and inservice training in geography. This new program would be authorized through fiscal year 1993 at $5 million annually. I think this is a very important program addressing a very real problem.

The second Senate amendment would reauthorize the U.S. Institute of Peace through fiscal year 1993. The authorization would be for $10 million annually through fiscal year 1991, and $15 million annually for fiscal years 1992 and 1993. The Peace Institute supports programs and research in the area of international peace and conflict resolution. Although only 2 years old, the Institute has made a very auspicious start. It has initiated its Jennings Randolph Program for International Peace, named after our distinguished former colleague and a program that has become a cornerstone of the Institute's activities. The Institute has appointed its first eight Jennings Randolph Distinguished Fellows, who will devote their fellowship time to issues of international peace and management of international conflict. Among the first eight fellows are Bradford Morse, former Under Secretary General of the United Nations, Eugene Rostow, former Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs, and Francis Deng, former Ambassador to the United States and Minister of State for Foreign Affairs of Sudan. The institute also conducts a grants program that provides support to nonprofit organizations, public schools, colleges and universities and local governmental agencies to encourage scholarship, education, training, and information dissemination on international peace and conflict management. In addition, the Institute conducts special projects, such as an annual high school essay contest that addresses the fundamental goals and objectives of the institute. The Peace Institute is a very important entity that deserves our support. In a world of increasing conflict, it is absolutely essential that we have a body devoted to exploring ways to reduce or manage that conflict.

I urge my colleagues to concur to the Senate amendments to H.R. 4416. It is a good bill that deserves your support.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4416, the Library Services and Construction Reauthorization Act, and specifically the provision which includes a 5-year authorization for the U.S. Institute of Peace.

This is a modest but very important provision which has enjoyed bipartisan support in both bodies. The U.S. Institute of Peace was authorized in 1984 and is mandated to provide research on peace and conflict resolution, education and training for individuals and organizations in both the public and private sectors. The U.S. Institute has provided $2 million in grants to institutions of higher education which is an integral part of the Institute's program and one which I strongly support.

I also support the 5-year authorization which will allow the Institute to engage in long-term planning since the Institute just recently has become fully operational. The Institute has provided and will continue to provide a unique and much needed boost to peace research, education, and training in this country. The 5-year authorization will provide the Institute the ability for the first time to do what they should have been given the opportunity to do from its inception, long-term planning which will only enhance their already admirable record. It is also important to note the progress which the U.S. Institute of Peace has made and I believe that now more than ever that this Institute can serve a vital role in the development and strengthening of research and education in conflict resolution which will be relevant to U.S. policymakers. The U.S. Institute can do much more and deserves the continued support of the Congress to make it a viable and sustainable institution. Further, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the U.S. Institute's distinguished Director, the former U.S. Ambassador to Israel, Sam Lewis, who enjoys the admiration and support for his long and distinguished career at the State Department and now with the U.S. Institute of Peace.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend my colleague, GUS HAWKINS, the distinguished chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, Mr. PAT WILLIAMS, the chairman of the Postsecondary Education Subcommittee, for their support of the reauthorization of the U.S. Institute of Peace.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of H.R. 4416.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4416, a bill that will reauthorize two titles of the Library Services and Construction Act for 1 year, will establish new authority for National Geography Centers and will authorize the U.S. Institute for Peace for 5 years.

The two titles of the Library Services and Construction Act to be reauthorized are titles V and VI. These titles deal with the Department of Education's foreign language materials acquisition and library literacy programs.

The 1 year reauthorization of these programs will make its authorization cycles contiguous with the remaining titles of the Library Services and Construction Act. Next year, the Education and Labor Committee will consider reauthorization of all of the LSCA.

I believe it is important for modest funding to be provided for support for library literacy programs since we face massive problems in this area. Further, it is important to fund a program for the acquisition of foreign language materials so that we are not so linguistically unaware and isolated as a people.

The Senate amendments to the LSCA authorization include a $5 million authorization to support several geography centers in a contractual arrangement with the National Geographic Society. The National Geographic Society may enter into further contracts with or make grants to local education agencies, State education agencies, State higher education agencies institutions of higher education or consortia to establish and operate the centers.

Each center may support the development and dissemination of innovative curriculum in geography or other related areas and provide technical and resource assistance to elementary and secondary schools.

I support this initiative as necessary to reverse the shocking ignorance of geography among our citizens, especially our young. Far too many people cannot identify simple geographic facts. A recent poll showed that 63 percent of Americans did not know the two parties to the SALT negotiations; a quarter of Dallas seniors did not identify Mexico as the nation on the United States southern border; and Japan could not be located on a map by almost one-half of American students.

It is my hope that this important legislation will result in the education of Americans in the various aspects of geography, which is more than mere map reading, so that we are more cognizant of other cultures and peoples.

The Senate further amends H.R. 4416 to reauthorize for 5 years the U.S. Institute of Peace. The work of the U.S. Institute of Peace is varied. The Institute sponsors fellowship and scholarship programs, conducts research and makes studies into the causes of war and other international conflicts, sponsors education programs in peace and conflict resolution and disseminates information to a number of interested parties and constituencies.

The Institute is an independent agency which strives to be evenhanded and nonpartisan in its administration and programming. Further, the Institute's work recognizes the fact that the conduct of American foreign policy is vested in the Pesident and the Secretary of State with appropriate congressional oversight. Therefore, the Institute operates under the fundamental principle that it will not intervene in specific international disputes.

We invest over a quarter of a trillion dollars each year in building a strong defense. Yet, we have consistently overlooked the diplomatic and societal skills necessary to maintain peace. The Institute is a small investment in peace studies and peace skills. Closer study of history, of conflicts that continually threaten world stability and of conflict resolution techniques hold considerable promise. We cannot afford not to encourage these activities, and I commend the Institute for the start it is making on these tasks.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4416.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the previous question is ordered on the motion.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Williams].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have the customary 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4416.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 515, FAIR CREDIT AND CHARGE CARD DISCLOSURE ACT OF 1988, AND AGAINST CONSIDERATION OF SUCH CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 584 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. Res. 584

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report on the bill (H.R. 515) to provide for more detailed and uniform disclosure by credit and charge card issuers with respect to information relating to interest rates and other fees which may be incurred by consumers through the use of any credit or charge card, and all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are hereby waived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Bonior] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Latta], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 584 is the rule providing for the consideration of the conference report on H.R. 515, the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act of 1988.

Under the rules of the House, conference reports are considered privileged and are considered in the House under the 1-hour rule, and no amendments will be in order. Under this rule, all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived.

The conferees have drafted a conference report which follows closely the matters committed to the conference by both bodies. However, since some of the final provisions may involve technical violations of the rules, a waiver of possible points of order is needed.

Mr. Speaker, the conference agreement on H.R. 515 requires the disclosure of interest rates, grace periods, minimum finance charges, and other fees and costs related to the use of credit cards. The conference report represents the resolution of many credit card disclosure issues, and it enjoys the general support of credit card issuers and consumer groups.

I would urge my colleagues to support this rule so that the House can complete its work on the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act.

□ 1315

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the chairman and ranking Republican member of the Banking Committee, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. St Germain], and my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Wylie], for a job well done. They have worked out a fair agreement on a difficult subject.

The rule before us provides for the consideration of the conference report on the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act. While the rule waives all points of order, there are in fact two rules which are being waived. The first reason for the general waiver is that there is material in the conference report which goes beyond the scope of the conference. There are provisions requiring the disclosure of extra fees, such as cash advance fees, late fees, or over-the-limit fees which were not in either the House or the Senate-passed bills.

The second reason for the general waiver is that the conference report includes Senate provisions which would not have been germane if offered on the House floor. The conference report includes a Senate requirement that a customer be informed of changes in credit insurance provided through a credit card. This provision was not in the House bill.

Mr. Speaker, when the legislation made in order by this rule first passed the House back on October 28, 1987, the vote in favor of the bill was 408 to 1. I supported the bill then, and I will support this rule now so that the House may proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act of 1988.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WORTLEY].

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and I rise in support of this rule.

This is consumer legislation that is long overdue and that America has needed for a long time. I support this rule.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule. This rule, in effect, waives all points of order for violations of clauses 3 and 4 of rule 28 involving scope and germaneness. I should emphasize that these are technical violations. Under the compromise agreed to by the conferees, four additional disclosures were added: minimum finance charges; cash advance fees; late fees; and over-the-credit-limit fees and thus the need for the waiver.

The conference report also includes a provision requiring credit card issuers to provide notice to customers in monthly account statements 1 month prior to changing credit life insurers if the switch will result in an increase in rates or a substantial loss of insurance coverage. This represents a modification of a provision included in the Senate bill, but not originally included in the House bill. These changes are noncontroversial and have the support of both industry and consumer groups.

Mr. Speaker, this is good consumer legislation, and I urge my colleagues to support the rule.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 515, the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act of 1988. As an early supporter of disclosure of terms on credit cards and as a conferee on this bill, I believe we have a balanced bill that provides the consumer with all of the important information they require. The consumer has, in essence, a contract with the credit card offeror and, like any contract, the consumer should know the basic terms before signing.

As agreed to in conference, this legislation required uniform disclosures of the annual percentage rate, information on any variable rates, any membership fees, transaction charges, and the length of any grace period given before finance charges are applied. the means by which the balance is calculated and any other penalties and fees must also be disclosed.

Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives soundly and properly defeated an amendment that would have placed a cap on credit card interest rates during the original consideration of this legislation. It is surely that the expectation of many of the Members who opposed the cap amendment that a strong disclosure such as the one currently being discussed will do much to allow the market to properly function to force rates lower. Additionally, this legislation requires the Federal Reserve Board to watch closely the credit card industry and to collect information semiannually on the cost of credit cards.

Section 6 of this bill presented the greatest challenge to the conferees on H.R. 515. The compromise on this section now provides that whenever a card issuer proposes to change an insurance carrier, the card issuer must give prior notice of the proposed change. This notice must be descriptive enough so that cardholders can understand the difference between what they have and what is being proposed. Of course, the notice should not be in small print and the differences should be clear. It is more important that the consumer receive this "plain English" notice than receiving a new policy. The Federal Reserve Board is given the specific rulemaking authority to define what constitutes a "substantial decrease in coverage or services" for purposes of notice requirements.

All of the disclosure provisions in this bill, including the notice provisions under section 6, will permit consumers to make informed choices. It should promote fair and adequate competition in the marketplace and fair treatment of consumers. My colleagues, the conference report on H.R. 515 deserves your full support.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 584, the rule just adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GONZALEZ). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 515, FAIR CREDIT AND CHARGE CARD DISCLOSURE ACT OF 1988

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 584, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 515) to provide for more detailed and uniform disclosure by credit and charge card issuers with respect to any information relating to interest rates and other fees which may be incurred by consumers through the use of any credit or charge card, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 584, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of October 6, 1988, at page H9804.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. ST GERMAIN] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WORTLEY] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. ST GERMAIN].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, credit and charge cards are part of the contemporary American scene. More than 100 million consumers have one or more credit cards with outstanding balances approaching $150 billion.

H.R. 515, as agreed to in conference, is designed to protect the consumers who receive nearly 2.5 billion solicitations annually for credit cards.

The legislation requires uniform disclosures of interest rates and other fees that consumers face in making a decision to apply for a credit or charge card. Most importantly, the bill requires these disclosures up front before the consumer receives the card—before charges and fees start accruing.

Among other items, the consumer must be told, in a straightforward and clear manner, the annual percentage interest rate, information on any variable rates that might apply, any membership fees, transaction charges, and the length of any grace period granted before finance charges are applied. The consumer must also be provided the method by which the balance is calculated as well as ancillary fees such as cash advance fees, late fees, and over the limit fees.

Mr. Speaker, there was a great deal of discussion about the relationship of the Federal law to the various State disclosure laws.

Some of us, frankly, had hoped that we could avoid a flat preemption of State laws and allow the so-called truth-in-lending approach to apply—an approach which would have allowed States to enact credit card disclosure laws so long as they were not inconsistent with the Federal law.

Ultimately, however, we settled on a compromise which added ancillary fees which brought the provisions of this legislation to the outer limits of the strongest laws now on the books in any State. We also gave the Federal Reserve Board the authority to add disclosures in the future.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report is, without question, a major step forward for the American consumer. It is one of the most important and strongest credit disclosure acts that we have been able to move through the Congress since the first truth-in-lending statute was passed 20 years ago.

In addition to disclosing all the terms relating to the use of the credit card, the legislation also requires the credit card issuer that offers credit life insurance to notify the consumer 30 days prior to any proposal to change the company providing such insurance.

The notice must include information as to any increase in the fees for the insurance and any substantial decrease in service or coverage.

The Federal Reserve Board is required to define in regulations—in an unambiguous fashion—what constitutes "a substantial decrease in coverage or service." If it is to mean anything, this disclosure must be clearly brought to the consumer's attention in a manner that provides meaningful comparisons.

The Federal Reserve is also required to closely monitor the credit card industry and to collect information semiannually on the cost of credit cards. The Board is required to collect the data from the 25 largest issuers of credit cards and at least 125 additional institutions in a manner that will provide a valid national sample. The data is to be made available to the public and the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 515 ends the hide-and-seek approach to disclosures on credit card terms. It prevents sneak attacks on unsuspecting consumers who often learn of charges and fees long after the fact—too late to reject the hide-and-seek alternatives.

I want to commend all the members of the Banking Committee—on both sides of the aisle—who worked to produce a strong credit card disclosure bill. The chairman of the Consumer Affairs Subcommittee, Frank Annunzio, deserves special credit for his many hours of hard work for strong disclosures. Our colleagues, Doug Barnard from Georgia and Chuck Schumer of New York, pulled together a consensus package that provided the focal point for strengthening the legislation in the conference. Their work was so important to the final resolution of this conference report.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 515 is part of the growing consumer bill of rights that is being constructed by the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee and the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Barnard], and I will ask the gentleman from Georgia to manage the conference report for the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman may yield his time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Barnard].

There was no objection.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation.

It is the result of much hard work on the part of many people, especially myself, Mr. Schumer and Senator Dodd. H.R. 515 was unanimously reported out of the House Committee on Banking and passed the House and Senate by overwhelming majorities.

It is a bill requiring comprehensive fair, simple, and uniform disclosure of the basic terms of credit cards, which are the Nation's third medium of exchange after checks and cash.

Disclosure is fundamental to a competitive economy. Credit is a resource or a commodity like any other and if the price and other relevant terms are disclosed in advance of the transaction, consumers can obtain the best product at the lowest price.

When you go to purchase a TV, you look at the price and other features. Among several TV's of the same size, you may choose the cheapest with fewer features or you may pay more for a feature like remote control even though picture size and quality are the same. You also may be able to purchase that same TV cheaper at another store or you may be willing to pay more at a store that delivers or is close to home. It's your choice, and as long as you have the necessary information you can make the optimum decision for yourself.

The situation is no different for credit cards. Some cards offer a lower rate but no grace period. Others offer features like a grace period, merchandise rebates, travel services and the like. If these terms are disclosed conspicuously in the same manner and location according to the type of application or solicitation, as provided by H.R. 515, then consumers can choose the card and combination of terms best for them.

The disclosures required by H.R. 515 are stringent and comprehensive—they cover, at the time of application virtually every fee presently associated with the possession and use of a credit card. Yet they are presented in a way which is clear and conspicuous to the credit consumer.

In addition, the legislation contains notice provisions pertaining to credit card life insurance. Section 6 of the legislation provides for notice to consumers of any change in carrier. Notice of any substantial decrease in coverage or service that will result from the change is also required. The Federal Reserve Board will define in regulations in an unambiguous fashion what constitutes a substantial decrease in coverage or service. This is made clear in the conference report language. At no time during the conference was there any discussion of the requirement that any disclosure be in the form of a comparison of terms. Additionally, both statutory and report language make it clear that section 6 does not supersede any provision of State law applicable to the regulation of insurance.

Originally, the industry did not want this legislation—but I felt that they needed this bill and convinced them that disclosure was necessary to ensure competition and fairness in what is now a national market. They have gradually come around and now fully support the concepts in H.R. 515. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this vital consumer legislation which benefit every consumer.

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Mr. Speaker, the Credit Card Savings Act is the product of lengthy public discussion and debate, and this conference report ought to be quickly approved. This law will provide to consumers important information which will protect them from misleading solicitations.

Although the Truth in Lending Act currently requires credit card issuers to provide information concerning the fees and interest rate associated with a credit card, this information is only available after the consumer takes possession of the card. The legislation we are about to approve will inform consumers of such important facts before the consumer selects a particular card.

This is beneficial from two points of view. First, consumers will be in a better position to make wise and informed choices about financial decisions involving their hard-earned money. Second, credit card issuers will be forced to offer a more competitive product as the advantages of slick advertising, mass mailings, and telephone solicitations are outweighed by a clear presentation of the merits and demerits of each card.

The bill will require that any written application or solicitation to open a credit card account must disclose the annual percentage rate applicable, any fees imposed for issuance or use of the card, and any grace period.

In addition, the bill requires that applications made available to the public in retail establishments or catalogs and magazines must be dated and contain accurate information as of that date, and they must inform the consumer that terms are subject to change.

Mr. Speaker, I particularly want to commend today those Members who have been in the forefront of this effort, particularly the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. St Germain], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Annunzio], the gentleman from New York [Mr. Schumer], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Barnard], and from this side of the aisle, the ranking member, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Wylie], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Hiler], the gentleman from California [Mr. Shumway], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ridge]. They all deserve our salute and our deep appreciation for the efforts they put forth to reach this conference agreement.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report will implement a commonsense approach which will have a decidedly positive impact on the credit card market. I urge my colleagues to support this bill and this conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Annunzio].

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Georiga, for the time he has allocated me.

Mr. Speaker, I am strongly opposed to the conference report on H.R. 515. I wish I could stand here today and discuss the conference report at length, but unfortunately, I have not been given an opportunity to see the report. No; that is not unusual in itself, since there are occasions when all Members of the House do not get a chance to see a conference report. But this is an unusual report. I was a member of the conference committee, at least the Speaker appointed me as a member of the conference committee.

Mr. Speaker, I had planned to be a full participant in the conference, and had even prepared a motion for the House conferees to consider that would have, in my opinion, improved the legislation. Once the conference committee met, it became clear to me that I would have little if any role to play in the conference committee, even though I am the chairman of the subcommittee that originally considered H.R. 515, and a senior member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs. The time of the first meeting of the conference committee was changed without any consultation with me. This time change caused me a great problem, since I had another appointment at the new time.

When the conference committee met, I was not recognized for an opening statement, even though other Members on the House side made such statements, nor was I even recognized when discussion of the legislation began. It was clear that since I was opposed to the legislation, my views would not be considered by the House conferees, and I walked out of the meeting.

A second meeting was held, but I was not told about it nor was my staff allowed to participate in any of the staff sessions dealing with the bill. I have refused to sign the conference report not just because of my treatment, but more importantly because this is a bad bill disguised as a consumer protection bill. It is fitting that we are taking up the conference report in the month of Halloween, because this bill indeed wears a mask. And unlike Halloween, where you at least get the option of trick or treat, this bill offers only trick or trick.

This legislation is opposed by a major consumer organization that has worked the hardest of all the consumer groups on the bill. Two other consumer groups have given lukewarm approval to the conference report, but only after they were told, "this is the best you can get." It is strange to me that both of these consumer groups opposed the legislation when it was before the House because of the provision which prohibits States from enacting stronger credit care disclosure laws, since that same prohibition is in the conference-reported bill. I wonder why these two consumer groups would suddenly change their position, particularly when the U.S. Public Interest Research Group [PIRG], one of the strongest consumer organizations, still opposes this legislation. I am including in my remarks a copy of a press release that U.S. PIRG issued on the conference-reported legislation.

Let me suggest that what Americans want in their credit cards is not more disclosure, but lower interest rates on their charges. There is nothing in this legislation that will cause credit card interest rates to fall. In fact, I predict that this legislation will actually cause credit card interest rates to increase. If this is such a great consumer protection bill, why is it that all major credit card issuing groups support the legislation? These are organizations that traditionally do not support consumer protection legislation, but suddenly they are rallying around this bill.

I believe they see this legislation as an opportunity to increase interest rates and to blame it on Congress. I have already received letters from credit card issuers complaining about the increased disclosures and mailings that they will have to make to their cardholders. It will be only a matter of time before credit card issuers increase the rates on their products and blame the increase on the increased disclosures, paperwork, printing and mailing costs required under this legislation. And the card issuers will have a perfect execuse for raising the rates. They will blame it all on the Congress for passing this burdensome piece of legislation.

I have been the chairman of the Consumer Affairs Subcommittee for 14 years. Over that period, I have seen a great many pieces of consumer credit legislation. Some of those have been substantive laws, such as the Equal Credit Opportunity Act and the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. Others have been disclosure laws, such as the Truth in Lending Act. Both types of laws have a role in aiding consumers and the marketplace to function most efficiently. Credit disclosure succeeds when it provides consumers with information that is pertinent to their decisionmaking and that they would not otherwise get. It fails when it provides information that is irrelevant, confusing and useless. We acted on that principle in 1980 when we passed the Truth in Lending Simplification Act to get rid of information overload and emphasize the major items.

Unfortunately, H.R. 515 is a retreat from the principles that we have applied to credit disclosures in the past. Rather than provide consumers with relevant and useful information, it is so loaded with loopholes that it makes a lace curtain look like a brick wall. When it takes 25 pages of legalese to define the disclosures, you better look out.

Even more troubling than the disclosure provisions is the complete preemption of State credit card disclosure law.

The Truth in Lending Act provides a workable standard for the relationship between State and Federal law. Under truth-in-lending, State law is not preempted unless it is inconsistent with truth-in-lending. State disclosures in harmony with truth in lending are permitted. This allows States to supplement truth-in-lending disclosures. This preemption standard has been in effect for 20 years and has worked well.

H.R. 515 will strip States of their power to provide additional protection for their citizens. Currently, there are 10 States with credit card disclosure laws. The 82 million citizens of those States—who make up one-third of the population of this Nation—will lose the protections that their elected State representatives gave them if we preempt their laws. The legislatures of the other 40 States will be told that they are barred from protecting their citizens.

When I offered a credit card interest rate cap amendment to this legislation last year, one response was that the States had the authority to set interest rates, and this power should not be taken away from them. I tell you now, States have the power to regulate credit card disclosures, and that power should not be taken away from them.

The unprecedented preemption of State law is the opening move on the part of creditors to completely strip States of the power to regulate consumer credit. Creditors are already arguing that State home equity laws should be preempted by the pending legislation in that area. It will not be long before creditors will want to make total Federal preemption the rule, not the exception.

I can support credit card disclosure legislation—but only without preemption of State law. Preemption is bad policy generally. This preemption provision is particularly bad in that it creates an exception to a preemption standard that has existed for 20 years. If we adopt it, it will not be long before the exception becomes the rule. I will not be part of that process.

CONSUMER GROUP CRITIQUES CREDIT CARD LEGISLATION

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Senate and House conferees met late Wednesday and agreed to credit card disclosure legislation which fails to provide full protection for consumers and preempts states from passing stronger laws.

Leslie Gainer, Consumer Lobbyist with the U.S. Public Interest Research Group (U.S. PIRG) observed, "Unfortunately, Congressional banking conferees crafted a bill which will supersede existing state laws, prohibit states from acting in the future and allow the credit card industry to operate under a single new federal law. Certain loopholes in the bill contradict its title, the 'Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act of 1988.'"

Gainer added, "We are disappointed that the banking committee conferees accepted the banking industry's ultimatum to preempt state rights, and produced a bill which does not mandate up-front fee disclosure in all solicitations. We applaud Representative Frank Annunzio (D-IL) for his strenuous advocacy in opposition to the preemption of state legislatures."

Gainer added, "While the bill has defects, it provides important disclosures for consumers in the nearly 40 states that have not yet passed disclosure laws. In fact, now, most state laws are not as comprehensive in certain areas as the federal bill is."

The bill requires that all direct mail applications and solicitations contain the following specific information: annual percentage rate, how the variable rate is determined, membership fees, monthly charges, finance charges and grace period. Issuers must provide the range of fees for cash advances, late fees and over-the-limit fees. Charge card issuers will be required to provide similar information in all written applications and solicitations.

However, Gainer criticized the fact that in certain instances the law allows disclosures of key terms and conditions to come after the consumer has applied, and not until the card arrives and is available for immediate use. She said, "The original intent of this legislation was to provide meaningful disclosures before the consumer has to apply for the credit card. The conferees have produced a bill which they camouflage by calling it consumer protection legislation, while in reality a couple of provisions in the bill fail to mandate fee disclosure to consumers as they are being invited to apply for credit cards."

Gainer pointed to a few of the examples of the bill's weaknesses:

Telephone Solicitations—Telemarketers are exempt from orally disclosing the key terms and conditions during their hard-sell pitch if they merely hold back from charging the fees until the consumer receives the card.

By soliciting new accounts over the phone, the issuer does not have to send the disclosures until the card is sent (as long as the information is sent within 30 days of the telephone application).

Take-Ones (Flyers)/Catalogues/Publications—The issuer can avoid making any fee disclosures in catalogues and similar publications, as long as the solicitation does not refer to certain items.

Vague Fee Disclosure—Rather than requiring issuers to reveal the actual fees imposed (as some states now require), the issuer can simply give a range of fees that may be imposed for cash advances, over-the-limit fees, and late payment charges.

Total preemption of existing state laws, and states' power to pass disclosure laws in the future. States which have passed laws include: California, Hawaii, Illinois, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Rhode Island, Virginia and Wisconsin.

In a rollback of existing state legislative power under the Truth in Lending Act, the bill takes away the authority of states to require other disclosures not included in the new legislation. Disclosures that states may want to require, but would now be prohibited include: the length that terms offered remain available to prospective applicants; whether the issuer reserves the right to change the terms after the contract has been signed; whether an out-of-state issuer is complying with the state interest rate ceiling.

Gainer said, "This legislation is a slap in the face to state legislators who are being stripped of their right to pass consumer protection laws. As credit card marketing practices evolve at the local level, state officials will be beholden to Congress and the Federal Reserve Board to redress local problems."

She concluded, "While this bill presents the impression of mandating disclosure, in fact there are loopholes that allow advertisers and solicitors to disclose fee information too late. More important, this bill is particularly disappointing because it preempts the rights of states to seek additional protection for consumers."

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER], one of the authors of this bill.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNARD] for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, first let me thank so many people for their help and leadership on this bill: the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. ST GERMAIN]; the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO], my friend; the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNARD], and, on the other side of the aisle, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE], the ranking minority Member and my good friend; the gentleman from New York [Mr. WORTLEY], who I will miss very much next year, too. I would also like to thank Senator DODD for his leadership in the other body.

Mr. Speaker, this bill brings much-needed relief to consumers who are puzzled over which credit card they ought to sign up for.

When I first became involved in this issue several years ago, I was shocked to realize that consumers had no way of comparing the interest rates different cards charge. They had no way of knowing the grace period for repayment, and sometimes the annual fee the card charged was not even listed. Credit card consumers were buying a pig in a poke.

Mr. Speaker, so-called plastic money has been a mixed blessing to Americans. On the one hand it has given Americans great flexibility to purchase what they need. But on the darker side is that many people did not know all they were getting in these cards. They had little information about the costs, terms such as interest charges and grace periods.

I am optimistic that this bill will result in millions of savings for consumers. The bill will ensure that every consumer knows the real cost of all credit cards and allows them to shop around for the lowest rates.

Since I began the crusade several years ago to lower rates and since I introduced this bill, credit card companies have begun to compete with each other. Interest rates, which were once locked at 19 or 18 percent for all companies, have begun to be competitive, reducing the costs to consumers. A few years ago a disclosure bill would not have been effective because everyone was charging the same thing. But now that many major firms are charging 10, 11, 12, 13 percent, far more in line with what interest rates ought to be, now that annual fees vary greatly, real competition is possible with real and clear information. This legislation will mandate the so-called Schumer box, a clear concise tabular format, for the four most important pieces of information: interest rates, grace period, annual fee and all balance calculation method. These terms will be disclosed in big letters, in big numbers on every credit card solicitation, and that will make a major difference in competition.

I say to my colleagues, "If we pass this legislation, the fixed market, the oligopoly that the major credit cards' users have had, will indeed begin to disappear."

I would like to say, too, that the industry, and indeed the gentleman from Illinois mentioned this, the industry is supporting the bill. They are, but so are the major consumer groups including Consumer Federation of America, Consumers' Union and Bank cardholders of America. There is but one exception.

I think everyone has realized we do not have a consensus on actual interest rate caps. We do not have a consensus on a lot of other things, but we do have a consensus that it is high time the people were able to find out what they were buying. It is high time there is disclosure.

There has been an argument about preemption, and I would say that this bill does preempt State law. But preemption is immaterial because, first, this bill is tougher than any current State law. That is one of the reasons that we went into conference and made the bill the tougher, and the industry deserves credit for supporting such a tough bill.

The second issue on preemption is that credit cards, unlike mortgages, or auto loans, or home loans, are indeed a national industry. The large issuers control a lot of the market. If they are willing to go for tough disclosure, provided that they do not have to make different types of disclosure in each of the 50 States, that to me is a trade that benefits consumers, and it is a trade that ought to be made.

So, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it has been a long, hard road. I have been active in this issue, as so many of my colleagues have, for many, many, many years, and now we are finally seeing some light at the end of the tunnel. We are finally seeing the day when consumers will know what the facts are. And, facing informed consumers, the industry will be forced to compete on rates and on fees.

Mr. Speaker, it is a good day for consumers that this bill, this conference report, has passed the other body and now comes to this floor. We look forward to continuing the battle so that we will have real competition in the credit card market.

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just regret that my esteemed colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] has seen fit to oppose this bill because he certainly is one of the greatest champions in this body of the American consumers on the floor of this House, in the committee chamber or wherever else. I know his concern is that he would like to see a cap placed upon these interest rates, and many others would like to see the same, but I would have to respond that the consumer is well served in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this is a free choice by the consumer. The consumer will know what interest rates are being offered, and this is the American marketplace at its very finest when the consumer can make the choice whether to select or whether to reject a particular card.

Mr. Speaker, from this Member's vantage point I would urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 515, the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act of 1988. This legislation is much needed and long overdue. Some of my colleagues want to do much more. But we must be pragmatic in the final days of the 100th Congress, with administration indifference and strong interest groups' opposition; this is a major improvement in the present credit card laws. For too long American consumers have been left at a disadvantage and to chance in determining which credit card is best suited for their needs. Rather than having a road map to make sound economic decisions, consumers are often blindfolded by deceptive and incomplete information.

With today's action, that blindfold should be removed and the American consumer will be given the information and the opportunity they need to make an educated decision. As a result, competition among credit card companies will increase, hopefully forcing competitive roles and a drop in interest rates and other fees.

I am pleased that the conference committee incorporated into the final legislation my amendment requiring full disclosure of costs and fees at the time of annual renewal. With the 30-day notice period in this bill, consumers will have the opportunity and the information to consider the various credit card alternatives.

Mr. Speaker, the disclosure requirements upon renewal will likely have a direct impact on more Americans each year than other provisions of this law. According to a 1987 Wall Street Journal article, there are between 8 and 9 million American Express card holders. In addition, the 10 banks most active in the credit card industry have over 34 million accounts. So, from just those 11 institutions, over 42 million existing account holders will be armed with the details of all fees and interests rates. This disclosure and information and the appropriate time is the ultimate consumer weapon at their disposal and will likely lead to significant savings each year.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate the intent of this section is to provide consumers with clear disclosure information, in a timely matter, a clear note of their right to cancel continued credit availability, and 30 days to exercise that right and avoid payment of the fee and interest associated with such fee.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CARPER].

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNARD] for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in urging the adoption of this measure, the support of this measure.

What we have really done with this compromise is to say that we want to trust, put our confidence in, consumers that they can and will vote with their feet. They will chose a credit card. If they know what the annual percentage rate is, if they know what the interest rate they will have to pay on the credit card is, if consumers know what the grace period is, when they are going to have to actually start paying that interest rate, if they have some idea of how the balance is going to be calculated, consumers are smart enough in this country to vote with their feet or really to vote with their pocketbooks. This legislation gives them credit for that.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is the right way to go. It provides for competition. It lets competitive forces do their work, and I urge the adoption of this measure. I think it is a good compromise. I think it is good for consumers; I think it is fair to our financial institutions.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the conference report on H.R. 515. I believe that the conferees have done an excellent job in putting together a package that has the support of both industry and consumer groups. I strongly urge my colleagues to join the Senate and adopt the conference report today.

It has been a long, arduous process in getting this legislation to where we are today. Under the leadership of our chairman, Congressman ANNUNZIO, the Banking Committee's Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage first held hearings on this issue in March of 1987. The House originally passed H.R. 515 on October 28, 1987, by a vote of 408 to 1. The Senate then passed a modified version of the bill on December 2, 1987. In the intervening 10 months, Members from both Houses have worked to craft an acceptable compromise package. The conference report we adopt today is fine consumer legislation and the conferees, under the leadership of Chairman ST GERMAIN and Congressman WYLIE, should be proud of their work.

The disclosure provisions of the bill will benefit consumers in several ways. First, the disclosure provisions may enhance competition among credit and charge card providers, allowing the marketplace to operate more efficiently and resulting in lower interest rates and other more favorable terms. Second, clear disclosure of key terms will help consumers to understand better what obligations they will incur under various credit card programs. Third, this advance information will allow consumers to make better informed comparisons among credit plans without the need to first complete the application process. Finally, the conference report adopts a single uniform Federal standard that will greatly assist consumers in comparison shopping between credit card programs.

In short, I strongly support the conference report on H.R. 515. H.R. 515 is a necessary and well thought out consumer measure. I urge my colleagues to join me in voting to pass this important legislation today.

Mr. WYLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 515, the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act of 1988. I would like to commend the chairman of the Banking Committee, Mr. St. Germain, as well as the other conferees on H.R. 515 for their splendid work. I believe we have come up with an excellent package that will provide significant consumer benefits. I have always been a strong supporter of credit card disclosure legislation and am pleased that we are able to consider this issue today.

H.R. 515's credit card disclosure provisions will be a great benefit to the American consumer. I believe that there is a need to provide consumers with adequate information upon which to base a decision when they select the credit cards they use. I am a great proponent of the bills disclosure requirements.

H.R. 515, as it was passed by the House, had wide bipartisan support as well as the support of virtually the entire consumer credit industry. The House passed the bill by a vote of 408 to 1. The legislation generally required that card issuers disclose, at the time of application: First, the annual percentage rate charged by the issuer; second, any annual fee charged for card availability; and third, any grace period during which consumers would be free from finance charges. Additionally, the bill would ensure national uniformity of disclosure in connection with credit card applications. I strongly supported the House bill.

The conference report we are considering today embodies the principal components of the House bill. The conference has added certain disclosures and has retained the House's strict Federal preemption standard. The conference report has broad backing from both industry and consumer groups.

In short, I am a strong proponent of credit card disclosure and feel that H.R. 515 represents an important and needed consumer measure. I urge my colleagues to support the conference report. Thank you.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the conference report.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Gonzalez). The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I, further proceedings on this question will be postponed until Tuesday, October 18, 1988.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken on Tuesday, October 18, 1988.

MARINE PROTECTION, RESEARCH, AND SANCTUARIES ACT OF 1972 REAUTHORIZATION FOR FISCAL YEARS 1989 AND 1990

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments to the bill (H.R. 4210) to authorize appropriations to carry out titles II and III of the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act of 1972, to establish the National Oceans Policy Commission, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendments:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. Lowry] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. Shumway] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Lowry].

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has already passed the House and is simply coming back from the other body with very minor modifications. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4210 would reauthorize title II of the Marine Protection, Research and Sanctuaries Act [MPRSA] at levels of $13,500,000 and $14,500,000 for fiscal years 1989 and 1990, respectively. In addition, H.R. 4210 would require that the Secretary of Commerce ensure that the research program conducted under subsection (a) of title II be consistent with the comprehensive plan developed under section 4 of the National Ocean Pollution Planning Act of 1978, the reauthorization of which we will be marking up later.

The primary purpose of title II of the MPRSA is to provide for short- and long-term research and monitoring on the effects of pollution, overfishing, and other activities on the marine environment, including the specific effects of ocean dumping. The types of programs funded under title II include MOAA's Status and Trends Program, which monitors water quality data from various estuaries around the nation; the Consequences of Contamination Program, which links the chemical data collected in the Status and Trends Program with the actual effects on Marine life; the Strategic Assessment Branch, which prepared data atlases and maps of various estuaries; and the Hazardous Materials Response Program, which is NOAA's research and response capability for meeting hazardous material emergencies and conducting long-term resource assessments under the Superfund law.

As Members recently heard during NOAA's fiscal year budget testimony, the Status and Trends would be rescued by approximately $5.7 million in this year's budget. I believe that this authorization legislation is important to put this committee on record that it supports the Status and Trends Program, as well as other ocean pollution research efforts underway at NOAA to better understand the fate and effects of contaminants and other pollutants which we have discharged into our nation's waterbodies for years.

Mr. Speaker, this bill also includes the text of H.R. 4208, legislation that I introduced on March 21, 1988, with my colleagues, Mr. Jones of North Carolina, Mr. Studds, Mr. Fascell, Mr. Alexander, and Mr. Hughes. The basic purpose of H.R. 4208 is to amend title III of the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act of 1972 to reauthorize the National Marine Sanctuary Program for 4 years with a modest expansion of funding based on the additional requirements of the legislation.

Nationally significant marine resource areas are of great value for research, education, and for promoting general public awareness of our marine environment. As our ocean waters are continuously threatened by pollution and other damaging incidents, the establishment and maintenance of marine sanctuaries for the protection of nationally significant resources is of essential priority if we are to continue to enjoy the benefits of unique ocean and coastal resources to which we have become accustomed. The amendments to the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act that have been incorporated into this piece of legislation recognize issues that require immediate attention. These include the need for: First, improved timeliness and predictability of the national marine sanctuary site designation process; second, clarification of liability for damages to these valuable marine resources; and third, movement toward a uniform enforcement authority to better protect marine resources.

To begin, I would like to point out that existing law contains no deadline regarding site designation. This creates a tremendous problem as too often NOAA has proposed active candidates for site designation, for example Cordell Banks or Flower Garden Banks National Marine Sanctuary, and never completes the process to finally designate the Sanctuary. Section 102 amends title III to require the Secretary to publish a notice of designation with final regulations—or findings detailing reasons why one has not been published—within 30 months of the date which a site is determined to be an "active candidate" from the site evaluation list.

Mr. Speaker, these new provisions would force action that has been delayed in the past. The bill also mandates that decisions not to proceed with designation of a site be explained in writing and referred to the relevant House and Senate committees. This will in turn increase the predictability and accountability of the designation process.

The next section deals with the promotion and coordination of research, special use permits, and cooperative agreements and donations. Section 103 of this act strikes section 308 of the title and adds sections 309, 310, and 311 to deal with the above topics, respectively. Since national marine sanctuaries provide ideal environments for conducting marine research projects, section 309 requests that NOAA give priority to marine research within the marine sanctuaries and consult with Federal and State agencies to actively promote their use of the sanctuaries for research purposes.

Because not all activities can be adequately controlled under existing sanctuary regulations, such as those for research, education, and salvaging, section 310 establishes a special use permitting system to complement those existing regulations. If NOAA determines that a permit is necessary to promote public use and understanding of or to establish access to a sanctuary, it may issue such a permit with a 5-year maximum duration, renewable by the Secretary, under the specific terms established in this section. These terms require that the permittee's activities are compatible with the purposes for which the sanctuary was designated, not resulting in any destruction, loss, or injury to its resources, and that the permittee maintains general liability insurance. The permittee must submit an annual report describing the activities conducted by the end of each year. Should any of these terms be violated, the Secretary is authorized to revoke the permit. Section 310 also establishes a specific method of determining the permit fee and authorizes the Secretary to use these fees for management purposes and permit administration. Under section 311, the Secretary of Commerce is explicitly authorized to enter into cooperative agreements with any nonprofit organizations and to authorize those organizations to solicit private donations for the support of sanctuary activities. This section also allows the Secretary to accept any donations and to expend those donations for sanctuary purposes.

The next section, section 104, establishes a system for restoring those marine sanctuary resources that are destroyed, injured or lost. The section states that any person responsible for such destruction, injury or loss will be held liable to the United States for damages and appropriate response costs. Likewise, any responsible vessels will be held liable in rem. Persons will not be liable if they can establish that the destruction, injury or loss was caused by an act of God, war, or a third party, that the causal activity was authorized by Federal or State law or that the damage is of a de minimis nature. The Secretary is directed to pursue civil actions against those persons who are liable to recover response costs and damages.

Recovered funds will be set aside in a separate account and used to remedy the damaged resources. This provision works in accordance with section 107(f)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Liability and Compensation Act [CERCLA]. The set-aside may exist at a maximum of $750,000 to finance the relevant response actions. The bill requires that remaining funds be used to restore, replace, or acquire the equivalent of the damaged resources. In the event that this is not possible, the Secretary is authorized to use the funds for managing and improving the affected sanctuary and then managing other sanctuaries in need of funding.

Mr. Speaker, because of the slow pace of the designation process, specifically with respect to Cordell Banks and Flower Gardens, and because of nationally significant characteristics found in other areas, section 105 of this act establishes a specific schedule for the designation process for four sites: Cordell Banks, Flower Gardens, Monterey Bay, and western Washington outer coast. The section requires that a final notice of designation for the Cordell Banks National Marine Sanctuary be issued no later than December 31, 1988. It is my understanding that this is feasible and that the Administration actually intends to publish the notice prior to this deadline.

A notice of designation for the Flower Gardens National Marine Sanctuary is required by March 31, 1989. Although the designation process for this site has been underway for 10 years, I believe that this date is reasonable now that disputes between NOAA and the State Department regarding NOAA's authority to prohibit harmful anchoring of foreign flag vessels in that area have been resolved. Section 105 requires that Monterey Bay's final notice of designation be issued no later than December 31, 1989. Monterey Bay was previously an active candidate for designation, until NOAA removed it from the list for reasons which are somewhat unclear and inadequate. For example, NOAA felt that this was not a necessary sanctuary because two other sanctuaries in California protect similar resources and that the size of the proposed sanctuary would put a strain on NOAA's existing enforcement capabilities.

California's present sanctuary resources do not include submarine canyons, such as those found in Monterey Bay and are not as accessible to the public as Monterey Bay. In addition, NOAA did not know what the size of the Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary would be since the evaluation process was never completed. It turns out, in fact, that the Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary would most likely be considerably smaller than either of the two existing California sanctuaries. These facts, coupled with pollution, from various sources, that continues to pose serious health threats which cannot be controlled by existing conservation measures in the area, support my belief that Monterey Bay is certainly appropriate for designation.

The western Washington outer coast was placed on the site evaluation list in August of 1983 and, under this Act, would be finally designated by June 30, 1990. This site is adjacent to the Olympic National Park and holds a nationally significant collection of flora and fauna in addition to its variety of sea birds and marine mammals. However, the boundaries for this site as described when placed on the site evaluation list are not adequate for the protection of the rocky stacks used by the sea birds and marine mammals which are so integral to the significance of this site. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a strong point of directing NOAA to use initial boundary descriptions only as a general point from which further detailed review should stem. The boundaries should be subject to change upon review and open to development until the final notice of designation is issued. Section 105 of this Act also requires that the Secretary submit a prospectus to the Congress regarding the proposed Northern Puget Sound National Marine Sanctuary by March 31, 1991, and the Stellwagon Banks National Marine Sanctuary by September 30, 1990. These areas contain nationally significant characteristics that should be protected, but is also a source of various human recreational and research activities. Because of the multiple uses of the areas and the fact that extensive consultation is necessary regarding the specific areas to be designated, I believe that these deadlines are appropriate for the prospectuses.

Section 106 of this act recognizes four new areas that may be suitable for designation: American Shoal, Sombrero Key, Alligator Reef, and Santa Monica Bay. This section requires the Secretary to conduct investigations of these areas and to submit, not later than 2 years after the enactment of the act, a report to Congress regarding a decision as to whether any of these areas, or parts thereof, are appropriate for designation as marine sanctuaries or, in the case of the Florida Key areas, for addition to the existing Key Largo or Looe Key National Marine Sanctuaries.

Section 107 makes some amendments regarding enforcement activities as a move toward uniform authority to diminish possible confusion by marine law enforcement agents. These amendments have been modeled after the enforcement provisions of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act. Clarifications have been made with respect to civil penalty assessment, property seizure or forfeiture and storage costs. All are consistent with authorities found in the Magnuson Act.

In section 108 of this Act, new sections are added to title III regarding the authorization of appropriations and U.S.S. Monitor artifacts and materials. In contrast to past plans, appropriation authorizations would be divided into three categories: First, "general administration," which includes any costs relating to NOAA headquarters operations; second, "management of sanctuaries," which includes any costs relating to onsite management and operations; and third, "site review and analysis," which includes any costs relating to the consideration of a site for national marine sanctuary designation.

Provisions regarding U.S.S. Monitor artifacts and materials require the Secretary to submit, within 6 months of the enactment of this Act, a plan that identifies suitable artifacts and materials to be displayed as well as suitable display sites in coastal North Carolina.

Section 109 deals with the protection of the Channel Islands National Marine Sanctuary. It requires that the Secretary of Transportation transmit to Congress provisions that enable response to oil pollution incidents and other incidents which result in damage to the environment in the Channel Islands Sanctuary. The Secretary must also review all Federal, State, and local studies conducted on the hazards of shipping operations and submit recommendations on those studies.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is a most worthwhile piece of legislation. Positive action must be taken to protect our important ocean and coastal resources, and this bill is a major step in that direction. I would urge my colleagues to support it. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleagues on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, who have helped to improve this legislation, especially Mr. JONES and Mr. STUDDS, as well as Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, Mr. DAVIS of Michigan, and Mr. SHUMWAY, the ranking minority member of the Oceanography Subcommittee. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4210 passed the House last week by a substantial margin. Even still, I believe the bill sent back to us today from the Senate and that we are now considering is an improved version of what we passed last week. It no longer includes the provision to establish a National Oceans Policy Commission, which I believe was unwarranted because it would duplicate ongoing ocean-related programs and efforts.

Title I of this bill reauthorized the ocean pollution research programs as authorized in title II of the Marine Protection, Research and Sanctuaries Act.

These programs fund efforts by the Environmental Protection Agency and NOAA to conduct significant ocean pollution related research, and the Administration supports extension of these ocean research programs.

Title II of the bill reauthorizes the National Marine Sanctuaries Program. I support reauthorization of the Sanctuaries Program, as does the Administration; however, I share the concerns of the Administration regarding the legislative designations for certain sanctuaries. I believe these provisions circumvent the carefully crafted administrative procedure which we, the Congress, set up when we last authorized the program in 1984; however, the designations made in this bill are clearly subject to the appropriations process, and it should be clear that operation and maintenance of existing sanctuaries should not suffer any decreases in funding to meet these new legislative designations.

Given this caveat, I am willing to support this legislation to insure that the Marine Sanctuaries Program is reauthorized.

I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, that I am particularly supportive of a provision included by my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] to further protect the Channel Islands Marine Sanctuary off the coast of California from potential oil spills. This is a very important measure, and I congratulate my friend and colleague for his efforts in this regard.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California for yielding this time to me. I want to thank him and the gentleman from Washington for including the provision relating to the Santa Barbara Channel Islands in this legislation. I think it is extremely important to our area that we have these measures that have been included that will protect the Channel Islands. There are some other things that we have in mind, but we can talk about that next year.

The things that have been included here will be very helpful to us, I think, and may well prevent the kind of accident we had in February when two vessels collided, one sank, and there had been a certain amount of pollution from the cargo and we barely escaped having a severe environmental hazard and damage from the fuel oil on board the ship that did sink.

As I say, the measures included here should help to prevent that in the future.

I want to again congratulate and thank the committee for being so cooperative and so helpful in this effort.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California who just spoke for his statement and contribution.

I again thank the gentleman from California [Mr. SHUMWAY] for his continued work on this whole important area.

Mr. DAVIS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4210, a bill which was passed overwhelmingly by the House last week. This bill reauthorizes the research and monitoring programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration which protect our ocean and Great Lakes waters from additional degradation. Funding levels for this program are increased to guarantee that all coastal areas will benefit from NOAA's work.

The bill also makes needed improvements to the National Marine Sanctuary Program which has suffered from administrative neglect since its creation in 1972. New sanctuaries are designated, enforcement powers are spelled out in greater detail, and lawsuits against those who damage sanctuary resources are authorized with the money collected to be used to repair the harm. In addition, Congressman LAGOMARSINO has also authored a provision to ensure the further protection of the beautiful but threatened Channel Islands National Marine Sanctuary offshore southern California.

I urge my colleagues to again support this bill.

Miss SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 4210, a bill which was passed overwhelmingly by the House last week. This reauthorization is very important, especially in light of the fact that this body has just approved a bill which bans ocean dumping. This bill reauthorizes the research and monitoring programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration which protects our ocean and Great Lakes waters from additional degradation. Funding levels for this program are increased to guarantee that all coastal areas will benefit from NOAA's work.

I have been privileged to serve on the two committees which have jurisdiction over this reauthorization, the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the Science, Space, and Technology Committee. Through my position on these two key committees I recognize the importance of researching and monitoring the effects of ocean dumping even though this Congress is mandating an end to this harmful practice. I have worked to assure that both of these committees have given this reauthorization the proper attention and support.

The bill also makes needed improvements to the National Marine Sanctuary Program which has suffered from administrative neglect since its creation in 1972. New sanctuaries are designated, enforcement powers are spelled out in greater detail, and lawsuits against those who damage sanctuary resources are authorized with the money collected to be used to repair the harm. In addition, Congressman LAGOMARSINO has also authored a provision to ensure the further protection of the beautiful but threatened Channel Islands National Marine Sanctuary offshore southern California.

I strongly urge all of my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LOWRY] that the House suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments to the bill, H.R. 4210.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate amendments to H.R. 4210 just concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL FOREST AND PUBLIC LANDS OF NEVADA ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 1988

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 59) entitled the "National Forest and Public Lands Nevada Enhancement Act of 1988," as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 59

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "national Forest and Public Lands of Nevada Enhancement Act of 1988".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the public lands transferred by this Act contain valuable natural resources (such as watershed, range, outdoor recreation and wildlife habitat) which will be enhanced by the professional, multiple-use management of the Forest Service; and that certain national forest lands would be enhanced by the professional multiple-use management of the Bureau of Land Management;

(2) the public which uses these natural resources will be benefited by such adjustments in management;

(3) the public lands transferred by this Act to the jurisdiction of the Forest Service are adjacent to existing national forests and, in many cases, are part of the same watersheds and mountain ranges, and placing the management of these lands under the administration of one agency, the Forest Service, will improve efficiency and be cost effective; that similar efficiency and cost effectiveness will result from transferring jurisdiction of certain National Forest lands to the Bureau of Land Management; and

(4) there is a consensus in Nevada that certain lands should be added to the National Forest System and that certain National Forest System lands should be transferred to the Bureau of Land Management for management.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to transfer to the jurisdiction of the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture, certain public lands in Nevada currently administered by the Bureau of Land Management, United States Department of the Interior. These public lands are contiguous to the Toiyabe and Inyo National Forests and will become National Forest System lands; and

(2) to transfer to the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management, United States Department of the Interior, certain lands in Nevada currently administered by the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture. These lands are contiguous to other public lands and will be managed as such.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act—

(a) the term "public lands" means the lands administered by the Bureau of Land Management, United States Department of the Interior, as defined in section 103(3) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1701(e)); and

(b) the term "National Forest lands" or "National Forest System lands" means the lands administered by the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture, as defined in section 11 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974 (16 U.S.C. 1609(a)).

SEC. 4. TRANSFER OF LANDS.

(a) TRANSFER OF PUBLIC LANDS TO THE FOREST SERVICE.—Effective one hundred and eighty days after the enactment of this Act, the approximately six hundred sixty-two thousand acres of public lands designated for inclusion in the National Forest System on three maps entitled "Nevada Interchange-A", dated January 1987, "Nevada Interchange-B", dated February 1988, and "Nevada Interchange-C", dated August 1988, are hereby withdrawn from the public domain, transferred to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture, and shall become part of the Toiyabe National Forest or the Inyo National Forest, as appropriate.

(b) BOUNDARIES OF TOIYABE AND INYO NATIONAL FORESTS.—(1) The boundaries of the Toiyabe National Forest and the Inyo National Forest are hereby modified to reflect the transfer of lands under subsection (a).

(2) For the purpose of section 7 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-9), the boundaries of the Toiyabe National Forest and the Inyo National Forest, as modified by this subsection, shall be treated as if they were the boundaries of those National Forests as of January 1, 1965.

(c) TRANSFER OF FOREST SERVICE LANDS TO THE BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT.—Effective one hundred and eighty days after the enactment of this Act, the approximately twenty-three thousand acres of National Forest lands identified for management by the Bureau of Land Management on a map entitled "Nevada Interchange-A" and dated January 1987, are hereby transferred to the Secretary of the Interior.

(d) MAPS.—The maps referred to in subsection (a) and subsection (c) shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Governor of Nevada, the Supervisors of the Toiyabe and Inyo National Forest, the Nevada State Director of the Bureau of Land Management, the Chief of the Forest Service, and the Director of the Bureau of Land Management. The secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior may make minor changes to the maps to correct technical errors.

(e) Effective one hundred and eighty days after enactment of this Act, lands transferred by subsection (a) of this section to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture shall be subject to the planning requirements of section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, and lands transferred by subsection (c) of this section to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior shall be subject to the planning requirements of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976. All transferred lands shall continue to be managed in accordance with plans in effect on the date of enactment of this Act until considered in plans developed under applicable provisions of law. If no plans are in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, the respective transferred lands shall be managed in a manner consistent with other National Forest or public lands, as the case may be, in the vicinity until a plan is developed under applicable provisions of law. Nothing in this Act shall of itself require the amendment or revision of the existing plans governing public lands or National Forest lands affected by the addition or deletion of lands transferred by this act.

SEC. 5. WILDERNESS SUITABILITY.

(a) BLM WILDERNESS STUDY AREAS.—Any area or portion thereof designated as a Bureau of Land Management Wilderness Study Area, which is made a part of the national Forest System by this Act, shall be managed by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the provisions of section 603(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1782), to protect its wilderness character until Congress designates it as wilderness or releases it from further wilderness consideration. At the same time that the Secretary of the Interior submits wilderness recommendations to the Congress with regard to public lands in the State of Nevada, he shall also recommend to the Congress whether any wilderness study area or portion thereof transferred to the jurisdiction of the Forest Service by this Act should be included in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

(b) ROADLESS AREAS NOT RECOMMENDED AS WILDERNESS.—Any roadless area or portion thereof which is made a part of the National Forest System by this Act and which has been considered but not recommended for designation as wilderness pursuant to section 202 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1712) shall be deemed to have been adequately considered for wilderness for the purposes of the initial land management plans hereafter required for such lands by section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974 (16 U.S.C. 1604). The Secretary of Agriculture shall not be required to review the wilderness option for such area prior to the next regular revision of such plans for the National Forest in question, but the Secretary of Agriculture shall review the wilderness option for such area when such plans are revised.

(c) If at any time after the date of enactment of this Act, Congress releases all or any portion of the 160 acres of land described in this subsection from the requirements of section 603(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to offer for sale all or any portion of the released lands at fair market value. If the Secretary of Agriculture decides to sell such land, he shall give public notice of such sale and shall establish a date within six months of such notice for the receipt of bids on such land. The Secretary of Agriculture shall sell such land to the party submitting the highest bid (at least equal to fair market value) on or before such date. The land is described as follows:

Mount Diablo Meridian
Township 20 South, Range 57 East,
Section 28
Southeast ¼ of Southeast ¼
Northwest ¼ of Southeast ¼
Northeast ¼ of Northeast ¼
Section 34, Southwest ¼ of Northwest

(d) NO ADDITION TO THE NATIONAL WILDERNESS PRESERVATION SYSTEM.—Nothing in the Act shall be construed to add lands to the National Wilderness Preservation System.

SEC. 6. MANAGEMENT OF MINERAL RESOURCES.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to change the laws governing the management of mineral resources.

SEC. 7. ADMINISTRATION OF RECEIPTS.

The acreage added to the Toiyabe and Inyo National Forests in the State of Nevada by this Act shall not be counted in determining the distribution of the Twenty-Five Percent Fund between the States of California and Nevada under the Act of May 23, 1908, as amended: Provided, however, That the acreage added to these forests shall be counted in the distribution of the Twenty-Five Percent Fund among the affected counties in Nevada.

SEC. 8. WATER RIGHTS.

(a) Congress hereby expressly reserves the minimum quantity of water necessary to achieve the primary purposes for which the lands transferred pursuant to section 4(a) are withdrawn. The purposes are hereby declared to be solely and exclusively the primary purpose for which the National Forests within which the lands are to be included where established. The priority date for such reserved rights shall be the date of transfer pursuant to this Act.

(b) Congress hereby expressly relinquishes all Federal reserved water rights created by the initial withdrawal from the public domain in the lands transferred pursuant to section 4(c) effective on the date of such transfer.

(c) Nothing in this Act shall create an implied reservation of water.

(d) Nothing in this Act shall affect the right of the United States or of any person to acquire or dispose of water or water rights pursuant to substantive and procedural requirements of the laws of the State of Nevada.

SEC. 9. VALID EXISTING RIGHTS.

(a) Nothing in this Act shall affect valid existing rights of any person under any authority of law.

(b) Authorizations to use lands transferred by this Act which were issued prior to the date of transfer shall remain subject to the laws and regulations under which they were issued. Such authorization shall be administered by the Secretary to whom jurisdiction over affected lands has been transferred by this Act: Any renewal or extension of such authorization shall be subject to the laws and regulations pertaining to the agency which has jurisdiction over the land at the time the renewal or extension is requested. The change of administrative jurisdiction resulting from the enactment of this Act shall not in itself constitute a basis for denying or approving the renewal or reissuance of any such authorization.

SEC. 10. ADMINISTRATIVE APPEALS.

With respect to the lands transferred by section 4, any formal administrative appeal, adjudication, or review pending on the date of transfer of jurisdiction under this Act shall be completed by the Secretary, or his designee, of the Department in which it was initiated.

SEC. 11. TRANSFER OF BUREAU OF RECLAMATION'S WILBUR SQUARE RESPONSIBILITIES TO THE CITY OF BOULDER CITY.

(a) Not withstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to enter into an agreement with the City of Boulder City, Nevada (hereinafter referred to as the "City"), which will provide that, upon acceptance by the City of title to and financial responsibility for continued maintained of the parcel of land described in this subsection, all remaining repayment obligations owing to the United States, pursuant to contract numbered 14-06-300-978, dated January 4, 1960, between the United States and the City, as of the date of enactment of this Act, shall be discharged. The land shall be maintained as a public park by the City at its own cost and expense, and shall be conveyed to the City, without consideration, by quit claim deed subject to the conditions, restrictions, and protective covenants as established in the Guidelines of the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation (36 Code of Federal Regulations, part 800). Title shall revert to the United States if the land ceases to be used for park purposes. The agreement shall also stipulate that the City shall provide, without cost to the United States, the water supply required to water the Federal grounds surrounding the Bureau of Reclamation's administration building in the City, for as long as Federal ownership is retained, or through the year 2010, whichever occurs first. The land to be conveyed to the City is described as follows: approximately 3.25 acres, comprising all of block six, according to sheet 1 of 20, block plats of Boulder City, Nevada, drawing numbered X-300-460, dated July 15, 1959, and known as Wilbur Square or Government Park.

(b) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into an agreement for the City to provide gardening services on Bureau of Reclamation land within the City and in partial payment for this gardening service to transfer to the city any or all lawn and garden equipment owned and used by the Bureau of Reclamation as of the date of enactment of this Act, which is used to maintain the Bureau's grounds within the City.

(c) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to transfer title to the City to all or any portion of the City water supply system which remains in Federal ownership and located outside of the Hoover Dam security area, and to provide the City with a permanent easement across all Federal lands necessary to properly operate and maintain any facility so transferred. The agreement referred to in this section shall also provide that all obligations to make payments to the United States for operation, maintenance, and replacement for works transferred to the City shall be discharged as of the date or dates of said transfer of title or operations and maintenance responsibility to the City.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Vento] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. Lagomarsino] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Vento].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on S. 59, the Senate bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, S. 59 would designate 662,000 acres of Bureau of Land Management public lands in Nevada as national forest to be managed by the Forest Service. The new national forest lands would include the eastern Sierras, the Spring Mountains, and the Hot Creek Range. These lands would be added to the Toiyabe and Inyo National Forests.

The major provisions of S. 59 already have passed the House twice this session as part of two different bills. Furthermore, this proposal passed the House in the 99th Congress, only to fail in the Senate over disagreements about water rights language. I am pleased to report that S. 59 includes a bipartisan compromise on water rights language which guarantees that the national forest lands will have the same Federal reserve water rights found on existing national forests.

The provisions of S. 59 are the result of a grassroots effort on the part of Nevada's citizens. A bipartisan coalition of Nevadans from all walks of life and all parts of the State petitioned Congress to designate these lands as national forests. Nevadans have long recognized the need for national forests. In the first decade of the 1900's, ranchers petitioned Washington to establish national forests in Nevada for the purpose of protecting watersheds and rangelands from overgrazing. As a result of these citizen petitions, the Toiyabe National Forest was established in 1907 and the Humboldt National Forest in 1908. These forests are unique in that most western forests were not established as a result of local initiatives.

In 1985, Nevadans once again organized in support of national forests. The Secretaries of Interior and Agriculture announced a national interchange that included declassification of Nevada's two national forests and the transfer of their lands to the Bureau of Land Management. Nevadan citizens organized the National Forest Task Force to save these forests. Under the leadership of Thomas "Spike" Wilson, Sue Wagner, and Fred Gibson, the task force mobilized over 1,000 Nevadans to oppose the proposal at public hearings. This outpouring of support for national forests resulted in a counterproposal by the task force to add BLM lands which are national forest in character to Nevada's national forests. As a result of their efforts, the Secretaries reversed their position for Nevada and adopted the citizen proposal.

The new national forest lands are contiguous to existing national forest units and contain popular outdoor recreation areas, important watersheds for Reno and Las Vegas, ancient bristlecone pines, one of Nevada's few elk herds and an endemic species of chipmunk found only in the Spring Mountains. If enacted, this would be the first time in over 25 years that Congress has added a large block of land to the National Forest System in the continental United States.

This bill has the united, bipartisan support of Nevada's congressional delegation. I urge my colleagues to join me and them in this rare opportunity to add to the national forest legacy bequeathed to America by Gifford Pinchot and Teddy Roosevelt.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this side of the aisle supports this legislation that was first introduced by our colleague, the gentlewoman from Nevada [Mrs. Vucanovich] in the 99th Congress. Although the bill passed the House in that session, it was not passed by the Senate and, of course, did not become law.

The legislation we received from the Senate this year is an improvement over previous measures, and much of the credit for those improvements goes to the gentlewoman from Nevada [Mrs. Vucanovich]. I want to particularly commend her and the committee for working out the water rights language that is included in this bill. I think that does protect the rights of the people of Nevada, and it is to the credit of the committee, and as I say, to the gentlewoman from Nevada [Mrs. Vucanovich], that we have been able to work out this very difficult problem.

I again want to congratulate the chairman of the subcommittee for working on this and bringing the bill before us.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to pay credit to my colleague, the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. Bilbray], and the gentlewoman from Nevada [Mrs. Vucanovich] who serves on the committee with me, who has been so interested in this matter, as well as Senator Hecht and Senator Reid, who have followed through with regard to this issue on the Senate side. There have been a lot of tough issues attached to other matters that were important.

The gentleman from Nevada, as I was saying, has been a key help and adviser in this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. Bilbray].

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my support for S. 59, the National Forests and Public Lands of Nevada Enhancement Act.

I would like to thank the chairman of the Public Lands Subcommittee, my good friend Representative Bruce Vento for his work in putting together such a package with the other body that the Nevada delegation supports.

Mr. Speaker, several years ago, the Reagan administration proposed a plan involving over 35 million acres of public lands. Under this proposal, large tracts of land under the control and management of the Forest Service would be transferred to the control and management of the Bureau of Land Management. The impact of this proposal upon Nevada would have resulted in the virtual elimination of national forests within our State.

In response, Nevadans numbering in the thousands opposed the declassification. Joining in a concert of efforts, a broad-based coalition of conservationists, wilderness advocates, miners, ranchers, and others worked toward increasing the size of the national forests in Nevada. In addition, each of the four largest Nevada newspapers have joined in endorsing enhanced national forest service lands for Nevada.

As a result of careful negotiations between the National Forest Task Force of Nevada, the entire Nevada congressional delegation, the Chief of the U.S. Forest Service, representatives of the Governor of Nevada, and the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, legislation was introduced in the 99th Congress which would increase the size of national forests in Nevada. As you may recall, this legislation passed the House but failed to come to a vote in the Senate before adjournment.

The legislation introduced at that time would substantially ease the administrative burden of managing the lands while simultaneously improving the administrative capabilities of both the U.S. Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management. In particular, the legislation would enhance the management of our land and resources, including sensitive watershed areas, wildlife habitat, grazing resources, mineral resources, and increasingly valuable recreational opportunities.

This measure, which enjoys strong bipartisan support within Nevada, would further enhance administrative efficiency of the management of Nevada public lands by enlarging the Mount Charleston Unit of the Toiyabe National Forest, Hot Creek Range in central Nevada, and the east side of Nevada's Sierra Front.

Mr. Speaker, I urge passage of this measure which is vital to the future of the public lands in Nevada.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as indicated by my colleagues, this is a very significant proposal. It is one of the largest increases in the national forests that we have had in my memory. I think it is an important new responsibility for them.

The people of Nevada, as I said, favor it, and I commend it to my colleagues.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Speaker pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 59, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

IMPROVING PROTECTION AND MANAGEMENT OF ARCHEOLOGICAL RESOURCES ON FEDERAL LAND

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 1985) to improve the protection and management of archeological resources on Federal land.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 1985

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Archeological Resources Protection Act of 1979 (Public Law 96-95; 16 U.S.C. 470ii) be amended to add the following new section after section 13:

"Sec. 14. The Secretaries of the Interior, Agriculture, and Defense and the Chairman of the Board of the Tennessee Valley Authority shall—

"(a) develop plans for surveying lands under their control to determine the nature and extent of archeological resources on those lands;

"(b) prepare a schedule for surveying lands that are likely to contain the most scientifically valuable archeological resources; and

"(c) develop documents for the reporting of suspected violations of this act and establish when and how those documents are to be completed by officers, employees, and agents of their respective agencies.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. GONZALEZ). Is a second demanded?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on S. 1985, the Senate bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, S. 1985 amends the Archeological Resource Protection Act to direct the Secretaries of the Interior, Agriculture, Defense, and the Chairman of the Board of the Tennessee Valley Authority to develop plans for surveying the lands under their control to assess the nature and extent of archeological resources found there. The bill also directs them to prepare a schedule for surveying those lands expected to have the most scientifically valuable archeological resources. Finally, S. 1985 directs these agency heads to develop means of reporting suspected violations of the Archeological Resources Protection Act.

The principle behind S. 1985 is quite simple: agencies must know what resources they have before they can adequately protect those resources. Agencies should be doing such surveys anyway, but have not been doing them in any proportion to the need. In the meantime, looting of our Nation's archeological heritage continues at an astounding rate. Looters trying to find a few intact pots often damage entire archeological sites and make retrieval of the scientific information such sites contain impossible. That is a loss of our heritage in both tangible artifacts and in knowledge about the past.

S. 1985 makes it very clear that we in the Congress expect archeological resources to receive better protection. It will help in the creation of appropriate data bases for agencies charged with managing vast amounts of land with extensive archeological resources. It will enable us to better protect our Nation's archeological resources. Mr. Speaker, I endorse S. 1985 and urge its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] has explained the bill very well, and adequately. What it does is to direct the BLM, the Park Service, Forest Service, the chairman of the board of the TVA, and other Federal land managers to survey what they have in the way of archeological resources so we can protect them.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of anything more important that they should be doing in any event, so I strongly support the bill and urge my colleagues to vote for this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 1985.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on S. 1727, the Senate bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of S. 1727 is to establish a National Institute on Deafness and Other Communication Disorders within the National Institutes of Health. The legislation is virtually identical to H.R. 3361 which passed the House on July 12 by a vote of 409 to 2.

The passage of S. 1727 will clear the measure for the President's signature. It represents a continuation of and tribute to Representative CLAUDE PEPPER's landmark efforts to support, expand and promote the Nation's commitment to biomedical research.

Deafness and other communication disorders are some of the most frequent health problems in this country. Among children, hearing and speech impairments account for nearly one-fifth of all chronic conditions that limit normal childhood activities. They are second only to asthma and respiratory disorders as the most common of such conditions. National estimates suggest that nearly 10 percent of the population is afflicted with hearing disorders.

Today we have the opportunity to take action on this widespread problem.

Establishment of a new national institute at the NIH to enhance the Federal commitment to research into hearing loss and related disorders is long overdue. Clearly this is an area in which research could vastly improve the quality of life of many of our citizens.

Mr. Speaker, over 100 of our colleagues in the House have cosponsored H.R. 3361, the House version of this important legislation. I urge all Members to join in supporting passage of this worthwhile and constructive legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, may I say at the outset that it is a pleasure to be here on the floor of the House and to see a gentleman of your vigor and vitality presiding over the Chamber, and I would hope that in December, when your party is in conference, you would consider pursuing that as a full-time obligation.

Mr. Speaker, today we have the opportunity to move forward a bill that will help meet the needs of 26 million communicatively handicapped Americans. In 1968, the visually impaired were aided by the establishment of the National Eye Institute. Currently, the number of totally deaf citizens outnumbers by 2 to 1 the number of totally blind individuals. It is time that disorders affecting this other sense be the subject of intensive research and treatment.

The creation of the National Institute on Deafness and Other Communication Disorders will focus attention on the research that needs to be done to solve the problems that surround disorders of hearing, language, speech, and the other ways we all communicate with one another.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the new National Research Institute replaces the Communicative Disorders Program of the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke. The general purpose of the new Institute will be to conduct and support research and training to disseminate health information and to conduct other programs with respect to disorders of hearing and other communication processes including diseases affecting hearing, balance, voice, speech, taste, and smell.

Deafness and other communications disorders represent a widespread and growing problem in the United States. Communication disorders afflict more Americans than any other chronic health problem. Over 30 million individuals, and let me repeat that, 30 million individuals, or more than 1 of every 10 Americans, have communication disorders. Over 22 million people suffer from either partial or total hearing loss. Twenty million have a loss severe enough to make them handicapped, and over 2 million Americans are totally deaf.

Mr. Speaker, furthermore, over 8 million Americans have other communication disorders such as stuttering or tinnitus.

Mr. Speaker, as the U.S. population ages, the prevalence of communication disorders has grown and will continue to grow rapidly. Although these types of disorders afflict Americans of all ages, they claim the very young and the old.

Today approximately 15 million communication impaired persons, or about half of the affected population, are 65 years of age or older. By the year 2000, more than 12 million elderly persons will be significantly affected by some communication disorder. By the year 2050, almost one of every five persons will be 55 years of age or older. Of these estimated 58 million persons, 26 million are expected to have a hearing or other communication impairment unless successful research comes from this Institute, and the work being done throughout the country in the leading research, biomedical research activities of the Nation's universities and colleges.

We must try to avoid if we can such a clear and staggering statistic. A shocking number of infants and small children are victimized by disorders and diseases affecting their hearing and speech. One of every 22 babies born in the United States has, or shortly after birth develops, hearing problems. Ear infections are the most prevalent disease of young children from birth to the age of 7. Seventy-nine percent of all children have at least one severe ear infection by the time they are 7 years of age. At least 1 million children are afflicted with deafness and communication disorders and often left living in a world apart from others throughout the most formative years of their lives. These children often are unable to read beyond a sixth-grade level, because their ability to learn language has been so compromised.

I cannot emphasize enough that we are hearing more and more about learning disabilities and dyslexia and many of the researchers looking at that problem, which is estimated to affect 1 in 10 children who in previous years have been branded as stupid or lazy. For the 10 percent of the children in our schools today with learning disabilities or dyslexia, researchers are conjecturing that some of the ear-infection problems which are normal for almost all children to have may be the reason that learning disabilities occur. There are other reasons, of course, as well.

There is a genetic factor, as we can see in some families, where learning disability is passed on from one generation to another. There are some theories about possible impairment of a child during the course of birth. Scientists are also looking at ear infections, hearing disorders, as a basis for learning disabilities, which is a problem that many of those who are in the education field are claiming is a more serious problem than ever believed before.

In fact, some of the estimates of the people in the prisons is that an enormous percentage of the people in the prisons, when they are examined, have language difficulties, and many never learn to read, not because they do not have educational opportunity to be in the classroom, but in that classroom they still do not have a teacher or a methodology of teaching which would overcome their learning disabilities, which makes language so difficult for them.

The shocking statistics are even more clear when we add to the children we know of, the infant and small children, victimized by disorders and diseases affecting their hearing and speech. One of every 22 babies born in the United States has, or shortly after birth, developed hearing problems. Ear infections are the most prevalent disease of young children from birth to age 7. Seventy-nine percent of all children have a severe ear infection by the time they are 7 years of age.

Communication disorders exact a tremendous economic toll. We talked about the human toll in terms of disease, how it affects people's health, the young and the old, how it sets up barriers to their achieving success, how it affects their self-esteem and their ability to succeed in life, but there is an economic toll as well. Disorders of hearing, speech, and language alone cost the United States economy an estimated $30 billion a year in lost productivity, special education costs, and medical costs. That is a staggering figure, $30 billion. When we talk about the national deficit we talk about deficit numbers of billions of dollars. Lost productivity, people who are not able to live to their fullest extent and realize their potential. The loss to our economy is $30 billion.

The committee found that the level of support given to research and to deafness and to other communication disorders has not been commensurate with the prevalence or costs of this problem area. Communication disorders research within the National Institutes of Health is centered in the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke, the NINCDS, which also supports a number of other diverse areas of health research under their jurisdiction.

It is also estimated that materially supported biomedical research and communication disorders amount to only two-tenths of 1 percent of the national costs of these problems. Our committee felt that it is necessary to establish within the National Institutes of Health a separate National Institute on Deafness and Other Communication Disorders, the NIDCD, to provide this vital research field, the visibility, focus, status, and the program and research support necessary to move research on deafness and other communication disorders up to its scientific potential.

There is so much being done at NIH, so much needs to be done in so many areas, and we want a clear focus on this very important problem. That is why we are suggesting this separate Institute. It is not that research is not being done at all, it is that we think a focus of attention and more research can be done in a revised structure at NIH.

There has been significant work already accomplished in this area through the communicable disorders program through NINCDS but more could be accomplished if the NINCDS research priorities and goals were less fragmented. Currently the NINCDS has program responsibilities in a number of other important areas including Alzheimer's disease, a very important area indeed, multiple sclerosis, stroke, epilepsy, cerebral palsy, Parkinson's disease and amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, ALS, or Lou Gehrig's disease. The committee believes that it is unlikely that the proper level of support and recognition will be given to deafness and communication disorders research without fundamental structural change, and that is why the creation of this new Institute, to study deafness and communication disorders, will provide the same stimulus to this field as creation of the National Eye Institute in 1968 gave to vision research. The committee felt that there is a great need to begin development and training of large numbers of clinical investigators. This is a key area. It is critical that the new Institute support a program of high quality research centers with a major training component sufficient to train and interest large numbers of young investigators in the communication disorders.

For example, it is estimated that there are fewer than 50 physicians currently trained and funded for ongoing clinical investigation in this field, fewer young academicians are being drawn to investigative careers in this field. The new Institute should focus on these needs through a broad range of research training awards and the development of clinical research center development grants and sustaining grants. The new Institute should work closely with the leadership of speech and hearing and other appropriate organizations to develop such programs in the area of hearing, speech, balance, language, voice, chemosensory, and other communication disorders.

When our committee heard testimony, we concluded from that testimony is a very impressive set of hearings and witnesses that we had before us that there currently is an inadequate system of accumulation and dissemination of existing research and information relating to communication disorders.

Systematic data collection relating to incidence, prevention, early detection, and prevention of deafness and other communication disorders and a standardized system of making this information available to researchers and the general public is critical to meeting this important need.

The committee also looked at the effectiveness of efforts in this field and felt it would be greatly enhanced with the establishment of regional multipurpose deafness and other communication disorders centers around the Nation. These multipurpose centers would bring together a wide variety of professionals, from engineers to medical doctors, involved in the diverse areas of basic and clinical communication disorders. The committee felt that the establishment of a data system and information clearinghouse within the new Institute is also necessary for meeting this important need.

In bringing together these diverse disciplines, multipurpose centers will facilitate a more rapid and efficient transfer of accumulated and basic clinical results into the development of technical devices and procedures for the diagnosis, early detection, prevention, rehabilitation, control, and treatment of deafness and other communication disorders. We need to learn to diagnose these disorders, to know when the problem is one of the communication disorders or deafness disorders. Diagnoses and the work at this Institute will help us in the diagnosis. We also need not only to diagnose a problem but to catch it as early as possible.

I had an occasion in Los Angeles a number of years ago to visit a research facility working with young infants where one of the researchers believed that an early detection of a hearing impairment of an infant, even an infant, could allow a reversing of that problem by use of hearing aids, high-powered hearing aids. One of the problems they said to me that they felt occurred with these children if they were not detected early enough was the loss of communications ability that could not be reversed even though there might be partial hearing available to that child.

Early detection may be the key to saving many infants and children from a life of deafness and aloneness as the results of the inability to communicate and in prevention.

How can we prevent this high incidence of communication disorders and hearing impairment? We do not know now, but the research at this new Institute, and of course built upon the research that is being conducted now at NIH, through NIH, and leading academic centers around the country, building on the knowledge that we already have, perhaps we can learn to prevent this problem.

It is the committee's expectation and hope that establishment of the National Institute on Deafness and Other Communication Disorders will result in a significant increase in the overall support within the NIH not only for deafness research but also for the broad field of communication disorders and human communication research.

The new National Institute on Deafness and other Communication Disorders shall have the overall and primary responsibility for communication disorders and human communication research within the National Institutes of Health. However, the committee expects the Neurology Institute to maintain a limited role in the special area of specific neurogenic speech and language disorders. These disorders are intimately connected to the functioning of the brain and neurological processes. The committee understands this area of overlap in research to encompass neurological diseases and disorders such as Alzheimer's disease, Parkinson's disease, and cerebral palsy that can have devastating effects upon an individual's ability to communicate. The committee expects that the NIDCD and the neurology institute will collaborate in areas of study where clear overlap exists. The committee expects that the Director of NIH will assure that there will be close and continuous coordination between the NIDCD and the other institutes involved in related research.

The House companion bill, H.R. 3361, enjoys strong support in and out of Congress. A bipartisan group of 101 Members of the House of Representatives joined Congressman CLAUDE PEPPER, author of the bill, as sponsors of this legislation. In addition, H.R. 3361 is strongly supported by a coalition of over 30 national organizations representing communication impaired

Americans, professionals and other researchers specializing in communication disorders. Included among these groups are: the Deafness Research Foundation, National Association of the Deaf, American Tinnitus Association, National Rehabilitation Association, Gallaudet College, Association for Research in Otolaryngology, Self Help for the Hard of Hearing, Alexander Graham Bell Association for the Deaf, American Society of Deaf Children, American Hearing Research Foundation, Hearing Industries Association, American Association of the Deaf-Blind, American Academy of Otolaryngology, American Deafness and Rehabilitation Association, and the National Fraternal Society of the Deaf.

Mr. Speaker, it is the committee's intent that the National Institute on Deafness and Other Communication Disorders have the overall and primary responsibility within the National Institutes of Health for human communication and communication disorders—including disorders of hearing, balance, voice, speech, language, taste, and smell—research. It is our expectation that all grants and contracts and associated funding assigned or directed to the Communicative Disorders Division of NINDS by the Division of Research Grants as of October 1, 1987, and any additional grants, programs, and contracts the support of which is the responsibility, or which has traditionally been the responsibility of the Communicative Disorders Division, be transferred from NINDS to the new Institute. We expect the National Institute on Neurological Disorders and Stroke to maintain a limited role in the special area of specific neurogenic speech and language disorders. The committee believes that it may therefore be necessary to have grants and contracts in the special area of specific neurogenic speech and language disorders reviewed by a panel of experts independent of NINDS to determine those which would be appropriately maintained within NINDS.

It is our expectation that the new Institute will be established promptly, efficiently, and in a manner which facilitates and enhances the new Institute's independence and development. Every effort should be made to assure prompt awarding of deafness, human communication, and other communication disorders grants, programs, and contracts during the transition period. The Secretary should appoint the National Institute on Deafness and Other Communication Disorders Advisory Council by December 31, 1988. The advisory council should work actively in the establishment, operation, and development of the new Institute. It is our hope that the Director of the new Institute will be appointed no later than February 1, 1989.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support for the legislation.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to be the author of this legislation, and I am very grateful to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee who is bringing this bill to the floor today, that has given us his magnificent support in the consideration of this critical measure.

There are many millions of Americans who are handicapped in life by not being able to hear what is going on around them, by being isolated from their companies and their friends, living lonely in a world that was in movement around them, without knowing what was being said in their vicinity. Not only does that apply to the elderly, which may be 22 million who are handicapped in respect to hearing, it applies to all ages of our population, including children who are born with hearing defects.

One of the things that is most responsible for defective hearing is what we call the dead nerve. I have that impairment myself. We do not know why, but somehow or another the nerve that is the hearing nerve becomes insensitive and so far science has found no way to revive it and make it function as it should. We can try various devices.

If I may, in a moment of levity, Bob Hope asked me if I heard about the 90-year-old man who had AIDS, one in each ear. Well, many of us have one in each ear, but they are not anything like what normal hearing would be.

So I did not initiate this idea. A lady who has been associated for a long time with hearing programs of this country came to me and said, "Why do we not initiate a bill that would set up a separate Institute in the National Institutes of Health to deal with the subject of hearing deficiency." Well, I thought that was a good idea, and I introduced the bill. It has passed the other body and awaiting enactment in this body now, awaiting the approval of the House. I already have had encouraging indications that the President is pleased to anticipate signing this bill, perhaps would even have a ceremony in the Rose Garden. It looks like we have unanimity of important sentiments on behalf of this legislation.

I am very hopeful, my colleagues, that we can give this bill our approval, let the President sign it, and let us set in motion the research, the dedication for finding the answers to the problems of impaired hearing by the people of our country. Let us open up a new world to the elderly who cannot hear. Let us open the windows of speech to the children who do not know what is going on around them.

Let us bring all people who are impaired in hearing into close campanionship and fellowship and pleasant cooperation with their friends and neighbors.

So I want to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] very much for what he has done to bring this bill forward. I want to thank my colleagues for their support which I hope they will give to it. We can all expect, I believe, favorable results for the people today who have impaired hearing which diminishes their enjoyment of life and their happiness in our good land.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and pleasure that I rise in support of S. 1727. S. 1727 is identical to my bill, H.R. 3361, to establish as the 13th National Institute of Health, a National Institute on Deafness and Communication Disorders. I am pleased to say that H.R. 3361 recently passed the House by a vote of 409-2.

Mr. Speaker, this measure looks to the future. It aims to make life better, healthier and happier for Americans today and for generations and generations to come. It holds great promise for advances in the area of health care research and treatment.

H.R. 3361 would create a separate National Institute on Deafness and Other Communication Disorders within the National Institutes of Health. It is a subject of immense importance to the millions of Americans who are communication impaired.

Communication is obviously one of the most precious aspects of life. Yet, for more than 30 million Americans, or 1 of every 10 of our fellow citizens, hearing and speaking can't simply be taken for granted. In fact, more Americans are disabled by deafness and other communication disorders than by any other chronic health condition.

Over 22 million people suffer from either partial or total hearing loss. 2 million are totally deaf. In addition, over 8 million Americans suffer from speech and other communication disorders, such as stuttering and tinnitus—from mild to severe.

Mr. Speaker, communication disorders claim the very young and the old as their most common victims:

About half of all hearing- and speech-impaired people are over the age of 65.

One of every 22 babies born in the United States has or shortly develops hearing problems.

More than 1 million children are afflicted with deafness and speech disorders. These children often are unable to read beyond a sixth-grade level because their ability to learn language has been so compromised.

Mr. Speaker, we need to make a strong national commitment to combat disorders and impairments which rob so many of the ability to hear and speak. The creation of a separate National Institute on Deafness and Communication Disorders, as called for in H.R. 3361, begins that national commitment.

The Nation's top scientists tell us that they are on the verge of great advancements. Among the many improvements we hope to see in the future from the new institute we could soon:

Develop a vaccine to combat ear infection in children;

Isolate the cause and develop a cure or treatment for nerve deafness, the cause of 80 percent of all hearing loss; and

Provide the profoundly deaf not only with hearing "sounds", but with speech or language through more sophisticated technology.

It is our clear intent that the National Institute on Deafness and other Communication Disorders shall have the overall and primary responsibility within the National Institutes of Health for human communication and communication disorders (including disorders of hearing, balance, voice, speech, language, taste and smell) research. It is our expectation that all grants and contracts and associated funding assigned or directed to the Communicative Disorders Division of NINDS by the Division of Research Grants as of October 1, 1987, and any additional grants, programs and contracts the support of which is the responsibility, or which has traditionally been the responsibility of the Communicative Disorders Division, be transferred from NINDS to the new Institute. The Congress does, however, expect the National Institute on Neurological Disorders and Stroke to maintain a limited role in the special area of specific neurogenic speech and language disorders. We believe that it may, therefore, be necessary to have grants and contracts in the special area of specific neutrogenic speech and language disorders reviewed by a panel of experts independent of NINDS to determine those which would be appropriately maintained within NINDS.

It is the intent of the Congress that the new institute will be established promptly, efficiently and in a manner which facilitates and enhances the new institute's independence and development. We expect that all due efforts will be made to assure prompt awardings of deafness, human communication and other communication disorders grants, programs and contracts during the transition. We also direct the Secretary to appoint the National Institute on Deafness and Other Communication Disorders Advisory Council by December 31, 1988. It is the intent of the Congress that the advisory council work actively in the establishment, operation and development of the new Institute. It is also expectation that the Director of the new Institute will be appointed no later than February 1, 1989.

H.R. 3361 enjoys strong bipartisan support in the House. Over 100 of our colleagues have cosponsored this legislation. The bill also has the strong backing of over 30 national organizations representing the communication impaired and a coalition of very distinguished business and community leaders. I have included with my statement a listing of these supporters which I hope can be included in the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, I am deeply indebted to my great colleague from California, the Honorable HENRY WAXMAN, chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment of the Committee on Energy and Commerce. Without his great skill and leadership, this bill would not be before us today. In addition, I want to commend the tremendous efforts of Senator TOM HARKIN of Iowa, the Senate sponsor on the new Institute. He has done a remarkable job in seeing this bill on through to enactment. I am also particularly indebted to Mrs. Geraldine Dietz Fox of the Deafness Research Foundation for her skilled and tireless efforts on behalf of this important legislation. I also want to warmly commend the council of organizational representatives [COR] for their excellent work on behalf of H.R. 3361 and am especially thankful for their important suggestion to amend the bill to include a model advisory council to the institute which would have strong representation of consumers. I strongly support such an amendment and hope that the council could serve as a model of appropriate consumer input into the operations of the other institutes within NIH.

So it is with great pleasure that I urge my colleagues to support this landmark measure. It will do much good for the health and welfare of the American people now and long into the future.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, our committee approached establishment of a new national research institute with what I think was the appropriate caution. We were sensitive to concerns raised by some voices in the scientific community that the overall size of the National Institutes of Health could become unmanageable and we were aware of suggestions that the number of NIH national research institutes be frozen, reduced or reorganized with those research institutes of the alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health administration.

I think it is important to note that the proposed institute will only be the second national research institute to be created at the National Institutes of Health in the past 14 years.

In the past 25 years, there have been over 180 bills introduced in Congress to establish new national research institutes. With the addition of this Deafness Institute, the number of NIH institutes will total only 13. The committee was sensitive and was concerned that too casual approval of new research entities by the Congress or the administration could fragment its existing scientific efforts and unreasonably increase NIH's administrative burden.

With respect to any additional administrative costs that might be required to initiate the new institute, specific provisions have been included in legislation to assure that new administrative costs would not exceed existing statutory administrative limits that apply to NIH activity. In addition, a study of the organizational history reveals that establishment of new national research institutes is an infrequent if not rare occurrence.

In 1984, the National Academy of Sciences' Institute of Medicine issued a report entitled "Responding to Health Needs and Scientific Opportunity, the Organizational Structure of the National Institutes of Health."

The Institute of Medicine studies concluded that while "There should be a presumption against additions at the institute level, there may however be circumstances in which organizational change is necessary and it is important to recognize those circumstances."

The Deafness Institute is only the second national research institute to be established in the past 14 years and I think that is ample proof that the decision to establish a new research institute is one that the Congress views with the greatest of caution. The Institute of Medicine recognized that there were unique circumstances in which organizational changes in NIH were necessary.

The Institute of Medicine specified five criteria which should be considered in evaluating proposals for organizational changes at NIH.

Before I list these five criteria, Mr. Speaker, I would at this point yield to the gentleman from Minnesota for any remarks that he might care to make about the retiring Member from New York, if this is an appropriate time to do that.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I am afraid that in order to do that we are going to need a little bit more time than that. We have a number of Members who want to participate. While I am sympathetic to the schedule that the Committee on Energy and Commerce is trying to meet, I am afraid that I will need a little bit more time than the gentleman may be able to yield to me. I believe we have a number of Members who are waiting to come to the floor in order to participate in the special order honoring our colleague.

So I appreciate the gentleman being generous with his time, but I am afraid I do not quite think that is going to quite work for us.

Mr. MADIGAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], the chairman of the subcommittee, before I proceed to list these criteria, I wonder if the gentleman has resolved in his own mind how he wishes to proceed. I understand that the time has expired on the gentleman's side, and that we may have some 10 minutes or so left on this side.

As I have indicated to the gentleman, there are a number of Members on my side who do want to proceed with the special order commending our colleague, JACK KEMP, for his many years of distinguished service in this body. Some of those Members have arrangements made for airplanes and the time is growing short for them. I know the gentleman is aware of all those things, and I wonder how he wishes to proceed.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADIGAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, we are trying to clear with the leadership a request that would permit us to allow this special order to Congressman KEMP to proceed and then permit us further to take up this as well as other legislation, some of which we expect to come very shortly, in a matter of 10 minutes or maybe more, but hopefully no more than 10 minutes, from the other side of the Capitol. If the gentleman would permit, perhaps while we are getting the authorization to do that, we could have an agreement to continue this discussion on this important bill and maybe we can dispose of this bill and then be able to come back and deal with the others.

It seems to me that is the most orderly way for us to proceed.

Mr. MADIGAN. So it would be the gentleman's suggestion that at this point we yield such remaining time and go to a vote on this bill and go to the special order on our colleague, Mr. KEMP, and await the decision of the leadership as to whether or not we would return to our other business?

Mr. WAXMAN. I think the preferable way for us to deal with this is for us to complete the debate on this bill which may take no more than—I do not know how much time the gentleman has—maybe another 5 or 10 minutes. By that time we should be in a position to allow the other group to go forward and have that all cleared.

Does the gentleman have more time, may I inquire?

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time remains on this side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GONZALEZ). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. MADIGAN. So those Members wishing to participate in the special order for Mr. KEMP should be on the floor in about 7 minutes. Would that be a reasonable conclusion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no way of ascertaining when an absent Member will come to the House floor. However, the Chair will advise both sides that there is no impediment to concluding consideration of this. The Chair will then proceed into special orders with the reservation that as soon as that legislative enactment from the Senate side is managed to the House, the Chair will reserve the right to resume consideration of regular legislative business, under suspension of the rules, but limited to S. 2843, Animal Drug and Patent Term Authorization Act and the Omnibus Health Act.

There is no impediment to concluding debate on this bill and proceeding forth with special orders with that reservation that the Chair can recognize for the consideration of substantive legislative matters.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield further, I would suggest a unanimous-consent request, a proposal that the Chair be empowered to call for the consideration of those two items following the special orders upon authorization by the Speaker or his designee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. WEBER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do so in order to ask the gentleman to again clarify. As I understand it, we are going to conclude the 7 minutes or so remaining on this piece of legislation. Then we would move to special orders. And then under the gentleman's unanimous consent request, the Chair would be empowered to basically cut off special orders and go to two other items of legislation when they arrive from the Senate.

Mr. WAXMAN. If the gentleman would yield, that would be correct, the two items announced by the Chair. Under this unanimous consent request, should he have authorization from the Speaker to do so, we would then return those items after the special order.

Mr. WEBER. Further reserving the right to object, and I think the gentleman has answered my question, we would be allowed to conclude the special order that we were engaging in and then following the completion of that special order the two items that the gentleman is referring to would be brought up with the authorization of the Speaker.

Mr. WAXMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WEBER. But following completion of this item of business we would be going to special orders.

Mr. WAXMAN. The gentleman is correct, under the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report to S. 1727 which would establish the National Institute on Deafness and Other Communication Disorders at the National Institutes of Health.

S. 1727 will take a giant step forward in our Nation's efforts to combat deafness and other disorders which limit one's ability to communicate. The creation of a separate National Institute of Deafness and Other Communication Disorders will for the first time give the proper recognition in this Nation to what has largely been a hidden problem.

Most individuals take their communication abilities for granted. Over 24 million Americans are hearing impaired and over 3 million Americans, both children and adults, suffer from a stuttering handicap. By establishing a separate national institute for hearing and other communicative disorders we can look forward to the research development necessary to help those with hearing and speech impairments. As a cosponsor of the House version of this legislation, I urge my colleagues to support this conference report.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I urge all Members to support the National Institute for Deafness within the National Institutes of Health.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 1727.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5521, REQUIRING REVOCATION OF CHARTER OF THE FEDERAL ASSET DISPOSITION ASSOCIATION AND REFORMING PROCESS FOR LIQUIDATING ASSETS OF FAILED THRIFT INSTITUTIONS

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 100-1087) on the resolution (H. Res. 588) providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5521) to require the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation to revoke the charter of the Federal Asset Disposition Association and reform the process for liquidating assets of failed thrift institutions, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

A TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE JACK KEMP UPON HIS RETIREMENT FROM CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GONZALEZ). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, as we come close to the end of the historic 100th Congress, it is appropriate that we honor many of the Members that will be departing for various reasons at the end of this Congress. It is my privilege to take out this special order, along with my distinguished colleague and friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON], for the purposes of honoring one of the most distinguished and best known Members of the 100th Congress who will not be returning to the 101st Congress. I am referring to our friend and colleague from the State of New York, the Honorable JACK KEMP.

JACK has been the chairman of the House Republican Conference and has served in Congress for these last 18 years, representing his district from Buffalo, NY. This year he was a leading candidate for the Presidential nomination of the Republican Party. For that reason he decided to end his career in the House of Representatives at the end of the 100th Congress.

That candidacy was not ultimately successful, and our colleague is today campaigning across the country for the election of GEORGE BUSH. But he leaves behind him a strong and powerful legacy as a leader for his party on foreign policy, as a leader for his party on social policy, as a leader for his party on economic policy, and as a significant political leader in the latter half of the 20th century.

I would simply like to begin, before I yield to my friend, the dean of the New York delegation, by saying that before we talk about his many accomplishments as a legislator and a political leader, to those of us who know JACK KEMP well, one of the most endearing characteristics about him is that he genuinely, in a day when everyone flaunts their family characteristics, is a man dedicated first and foremost to his family. So I would like to begin by saying that as we pay tribute to JACK KEMP, we are also paying tribute to Joanne Kemp, Jeff Kemp, Judith Kemp, Jennifer Kemp, and Jimmy Kemp, who make up the Kemp team and who have become so close to us over the years they have been here in Washington.

I have other remarks I will make, but I know there are many Members of the body who want to share their thoughts about our departing colleague, so I will interject my remarks, Mr. Speaker, as time permits.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I will yield to my partner in this special order, the dean of the New York delegation, the gentleman from New York, Mr. FRANK HORTON.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I join with him in honoring JACK KEMP. As the dean of the New York Republican delegation, I have taken this time for not only Republicans but also for Democrats on both sides of the aisle to pay honor to our good friend, JACK KEMP.

Mr. Speaker, normally when these special orders are held on the occasion of a Member's retirement from the House it is a sign of an ending. In the case of JACK KEMP, however, I find it easy to believe that we are helping to celebrate an entirely new beginning for my friend from upstate New York.

Being an ardent sports fan, I have followed JACK'S career since his days as quarterback of the Buffalo Bills. JACK was the star quarterback for the Buffalo Bills when they played in the American Football League. He was selected all-AFL twice and was named the most valuable player in the league in 1965. It is rumored that the present quarterback of the Buffalo Bills, Jim Kelly, is a little nervous about his starting position because JACK could become a free agent next fall. After leaving the Bills, JACK went on to cofound the American Football League's Players' Association, and served as president of that organization from 1965 to 1970.

JACK'S tenacity on the football arena is equaled only by his tenacity in the political arena. It was our good fortune to have this young football star from southern California brave the Buffalo winters and begin his political career in upstate New York. JACK was first elected to Congress in 1970 and he has served in this body with distinction for the last 18 years. He has represented the good people of the 31st District of New York with conviction and compassion.

JACK has long been a strong proponent of supply-side economics. He stuck to his guns when it seemed that no one would listen until finally the Reagan administration began implementing many of the ideas that he had espoused. These very ideas have helped us achieve our present economic prosperity. As Congressman KEMP promised throughout the 1970's, supply-side economics has brought the lowest inflation rate and the lowest unemployment rate in over a decade.

Regardless of one's political philosophy, no one can doubt JACK'S commitment of making a better life for all persons. JACK has been a strong supporter of legislation making home ownership possible for low-income families. As the ranking Republican on the Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, he has also been a key player in the passage of foreign aid bills which have assisted persons in developing countries. To encourage development in blighted urban areas, JACK has pushed for the creation of free-enterprise zones.

JACK has also been vocal in his efforts to ensure that America maintains a strong national defense. When President Reagan needed Members of the House to go to bat for defense initiative, he always knew that he could count on this young man to rally the troops. I am sure that, come January, President BUSH will be hard-pressed to find an ally with the determination and effectiveness of a JACK KEMP within the Halls of Congress.

Through his natural leadership skills, JACK KEMP was able to rise to positions of prominence in the House Republican Party. He served as chairman of the Republican Conference and has played a major role in defining the party's policy positions.

As JACK leaves the House, he will be taking a position with the Heritage Foundation. We look forward to his continued contributions to the political debate and his being a principal advocate of conservative views. Despite his recent unsuccessful bid for the Presidency, I would not at all be surprised if JACK KEMP one day resides in the White House.

On behalf of myself and my wife, Nancy, I would like to wish JACK, his wife Joanne, and his children the very best of luck in the future.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New York delegation, I want to pay tribute to this outstanding member of the New York delegation and wish him well as he goes to his next venture. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for yielding, and I am very happy that I have been privileged to join with him in these special orders to pay tribute to our friend, JACK KEMP.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON] for his important contributions.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBER. I yield to the senior statesman of the House of Representatives, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, there are many of our colleagues in this House who voluntarily are leaving the House at the end of this historic session. One of those is JACK KEMP from the great State of New York.

As JACK KEMP was a great football quarterback and possessed the qualities that enabled him to achieve such a high honor, he also achieved great success and distinction as a Member of this House. The qualities of leadership which he exerted on the football field, the capacity to command the alliance and support and cooperation of his colleagues, and his vision and his ability to see into the future lead him to great achievements as a Member of this House.

There are many fields in which JACK distinguished himself as a Member of this House. One of them was in the field of taxation, where he conceived and eloquently expressed to his fellow citizens a concept of taxation which many, including the President of the United States, thought had great value and great importance to our Nation.

He also has had a great vision of the America he wanted to see come into being in the years ahead. He believed that the greatest America was in the future, not in the past, and he favored every good proposal that made Americans live longer and live healthier lives and that would make this Nation a stronger and more prosperous land.

This House will never forget JACK KEMP for the years he was with us. We will never forget his charming personality, the warm friendship which we enjoyed with him, the cooperative attitude he manifested in dealing with his colleagues on the House floor, and the position of leadership that JACK so often commanded in so many areas of critical moment to his country. This House will long remember and long revere and long admire JACK KEMP. We are sorry to see him go. He carries with him our affectionate good wishes. He carries with him our warmest regards and our ardent hopes for a long life, good health, great happiness, and satisfying success in whatever honorable endeavors he undertakes, and we wish the very best to his family in the years ahead.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with my other colleagues in this tribute to a remarkable individual, JACK KEMP. He and I came to Congress together as freshmen in 1971 and have served together continuously since that time.

He is living proof that one Member of the House of Representatives can leave his mark on history for the entire country and the world. He has always been a man of untiring energy and unflagging conviction. He has made a major contribution to the economic well-being of this country by his input with the Reagan administration in lowering tax rates for all Americans, and all Americans can give him compliments in tribute for that accomplishment.

But beyond that, he is an individual dedicated to family, and his wife, Joanne, has been a major supporter in all of his efforts. Without her help, he would never have been able to achieve everything that he has achieved during these years.

As great as was his commitment to spread the good word around the country and as many, many weekends and days and hours that it took him away from his family, he still always made arrangements to be back home to attend the high school football games in which his sons played.

This man is a rare individual, and because he has walked through this House and because he has been a part of our lives, we are all benefited. I say to JACK KEMP and to Joanne and to all of the Kemp children, you have done a great job. There is much still ahead for you to do. God bless and Godspeed.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas for his significant contribution.

Mr. Speaker, I was first elected to the Congress in 1980. Many of us who came here in those years were particularly inspired by JACK KEMP and the causes he was fighting for.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to one of my colleagues who was also in the class of 1980, the gentleman from Omaha, NE [Mr. DAUB].

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER] for making this time available to recognize JACK KEMP's 18 years of distinguished service. It's been an extraordinary privilege to serve in this Chamber with him.

JACK is well-known throughout this Nation as one of our party's leading conservatives—and yet I think this is a misnomer.

Webster's dictionary defines a conservative as one who adheres to traditional views and methods—as one who is cautious.

Well, JACK certainly has traditional views on the family and on faith and on patriotism, but don't be fooled. JACK KEMP is a radical, and he proved it over a decade ago when he came up with this radical idea about making sharp cuts in marginal tax rates.

That was a radical idea when he proposed it—a radical idea that was later endorsed by the House and the Senate and the President of the United States—a radical idea that has spurred 70 months of economic growth and prosperity.

JACK's relentless and arduous work on this issue will serve as his greatest, but hardly singular, public service legacy to this Nation.

In another forum, within our own Republican Party, JACK has applied his fine-tuned leadership skills—and his time and his travels—to another important matter—a goal that we hold in common—and that is the expansion of our party to groups and regions that have not traditionally identified with our party.

This past August, at the Republican National Convention in New Orleans, JACK took time from his hectic schedule to speak before a rally of Asian-Americans and to advocate and articulate our belief that the Republican Party is the party that best addresses the needs and concerns of ethnic and minority Americans.

I especially appreciated his making the time to come to that rally because it was organized by my wife, Cindy, who heads Asian-Americans for Bush. As always, his remarks were welcomed with the same enthusiasm with which they were delivered. JACK KEMP never short-changes an audience, and his optimism is one addiction I can support.

JACK has an incredible ability to always make time for his causes, for his constituents, for his friends and for his family. And Cindy and I certainly feel that JACK and his remarkable wife, Joanne, are treasured friends here in Washington.

So I really appreciate this opportunity to wish JACK all the best in his future endeavors. I know he'll continue to come up with radical ideas that will benefit this Nation, and I know that his contagious enthusiasm guarantees his success.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB] for his contribution to this special order.

It is now my distinct pleasure, indeed one of the greatest pleasures that all of us have in the House of Representatives, and it is now mine, to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER], my friend, for his overgenerous remarks and for his thoughtfulness in scheduling this special order on behalf of one of our dearest friends who will be leaving this plateau and ascending, hopefully, to another and higher plateau.

Mr. Speaker, special orders are kind of sad in a way because it is taking leave. It is a bidding farewell to dear friends that we have come to know, and to admire and to develop close relationships with.

I see the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB] who just spoke here. Frankly, his loss to this body is a considerable one. He made a great difference, and he brought a lot to this body that we will miss.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will return to California, and I cannot think of a loss that I will feel more keenly than his.

Of course, we are talking as though they are passing on to their eternal reward. I hope they are passing on to more lucrative rewards and continue in public service by approaching it from outside this institution and not inside this institution.

But this special order is for the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP], and I must say he was a man of infinite complexity. There were no enthusiasms that did not capture him.

Mr. Speaker, he was a teacher. He was a behavior modifier. He was involved in the most controversial issues and always, from my perspective, on the correct side, which also was the right side.

He was an expert on defense policy, on arms control. He knew all about NATO. He knew about the Soviet Union. He was an enthusiast for the strategic defense initiative. He popularized the notion that assured mutual survival makes a lot more sense than assured mutual destruction.

He was a member, a valued member, of the Kissinger Commission, studied the problems that are almost intractable, it seems, in Central America. Mr. Speaker, he gave his intellect, and his energy and enthusiasm to that important inquiry.

He was a dear friend of Jeane Kirkpatrick. I do not know which of those two wonderful people influenced the other more, but it was a happy, symbiotic relationship I am sure.

He was a fierce defender of the Contras, the democratic resistance, in Central America. He had a vision that eclipsed most of us in terms of what might be and what might not be in terms of defending freedom, in terms of not yielding the field by default to the Soviet Union in our hemisphere by not permitting another bridgehead on the land bridge between Texas and the Panama Canal. He understood that we have to support the forces of freedom with every bit of enthusiasm and force as the Soviet Union, and the East bloc states and Cuba supported the forces of Leninism down there, and unfortunately his voice did not prevail. The consequences we will live, I am sure, to regret.

Mr. Speaker, he was an expert in economics. He himself was the legislative congressional progenitor of the centerpiece of the Reagan revolution supply-side economics. One man from Buffalo, NY, a Congressman, not the loftiest forum in the world to move the world, but indeed he did because of the force of his commitment, his personality, his singlemindedness. He more than anyone else made supply-side economics popular, I am sure persuaded the President as to its validity, and we are all enjoying the fruits of that economic system, that economic proposal which has given us 70 months of economic growth, put inflation in the basement down with unemployment and has generally been a blessing to this country.

Monetary policies, one of the most arcane, boring subjects in the world, captured his enthusiasm. He tirelessly campaigned for the gold standard or its equivalent, and who knows but what he is right on that as well as right on tax cuts and so many other things? And I am sure that that subject, which we all shy away from because it is arcane, it is difficult, perhaps his ability to teach us will continue, and we will be the better for that.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] was a tireless campaigner. I do not think the word "no" is in his lexicon. If my colleagues needed him in their districts, he was there. He loved to help his colleagues. He loved to instruct us in reality. And he went into the barrios, into the inner cities, he went into suburbia, and he addressed the economic clubs of the various cities, and he talked to them in their own terms no matter where he was.

Mr. Speaker, he was understood because he had an empathy for the problems of people no matter where they were. Of course his wife, Joanne, and his lovely family gave him the indispensable encouragement that all of us must have if we are to devote so much of our waking hours and productive years to the business of legislating.

But the energy that he brought to this job of being a Congressman, the enthusiasm that he brought was indeed contagious, and it showed many of us what one person can do with courage and with a fixed goal ahead of him.

Mr. Speaker, he has been a vital force for good in this country. He has moved this country, and I think so often of the words of King Arthur in "Camelot" where he said, "We are all of us tiny drops in a vast ocean, but some of them sparkle."

The gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] indeed sparkled. He was a diamond in a sea of zircons, and may he always sparkle.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] for his, as always, eloquent contribution, and I know the gentleman from Illinois is one whom our friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] holds in the very highest of regard, and his contribution on this day is particularly appreciated.

I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF].

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON] for holding this special order to salute the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP].

Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues to salute the distinguished career of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] who is retiring at the end of this Congress. I want to say to my good friend and colleague, JACK, that the Halls of Congress really just will not be the same without his presence.

I have had the pleasure of serving with the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] on both the Committee on Appropriations and the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, and have always been impressed by his energy, his optimism, his intensity for working for causes in which he believes and last, perhaps more important than anything, his courage to take on issues that many people do not want to take on.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] has been a true conservative voice in Congress and can point with pride to legislative successes such as the 1981 tax cuts, foreign aid funding, antiabortion measures and other initiatives for a strong national defense. He also brought to our attention the need to encourage development in declining urban areas through free-enterprise zones.

Mr. Speaker, he is a natural leader, and his bid for the presidential nomination showed the entire Nation that this former quarterback of the Buffalo Bills from the American Football League, most valuable player, not only was a success on the gridiron, but also has the attributes to be a leader, and a top leader, for the future of America.

It has been an honor to have served in Congress with the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP]. His services to his New York constituents and to the Nation will be greatly missed.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have a feeling, and a hope and a prayer that JACK KEMP's days of public service are far from over, and I am hopeful that the next administration will see fit to have him at a very high spot in the administration, and I would say that I think Mr. BUSH would make a fine choice to have JACK KEMP as his Secretary of Defense, and we wish him good health and happiness as he moves on to new and higher heights.

I want to thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER] again for having this special order.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my colleagues to salute the distinguished career of the gentleman from New York, JACK KEMP, who is retiring at the end of the 100th Congress after serving the 31st District of New York since 1971.

I want to say to my good friend and colleague, JACK KEMP, the Halls of Congress just won't be the same without your presence. I have had the pleasure of serving with JACK KEMP on both the Appropriations Committee and the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families and I've always been impressed with his energy, his optimism, and his intensity in working for causes in which he believes.

JACK KEMP has been a true conservative voice in Congress and can point with pride to legislative successes such as the 1981 tax cuts, foreign aid funding, antiabortion measures, and initiatives for a strong national defense. He's also brought to our attention the need to encourage development in declining urban areas through free enterprise zones.

He's a natural leader and his bid for the Presidential nomination showed the entire Nation that this former quarterback of the Buffalo Bills and American Football League most valuable player not only was a success on the gridiron, but also has the attributes to be a leader for the future of America.

It has been an honor to have served in Congress with JACK KEMP. His service to his New York constituents and to the Nation will be greatly missed. But I have a feeling that JACK KEMP's days of public service are far from over.

We wish him good health and happiness as he moves on to new heights.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF], and I think we all join in his hope that this is just the beginning of the next phase of the Kemp career.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COATS] and Marcia Coats have been two of the Kemp family's closest friends over the many years, and it is my privilege to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER] for yielding me this time and for taking out this special order, and I also thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON] for arranging this.

A number of us are here because we felt so close to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP]. JACK, I wrote some very fancy remarks and had them ready yesterday, and we postponed this until today because of the House schedule, and I left the remarks at home, so what I am going to say to you is maybe not as articulate as it would have been had I given this yesterday, but it is from the heart.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] has made a tremendous difference, a difference in this body, a difference in our Nation, and a difference in many of us as individuals because of his involvement and his presence in our lives and presence in the House of Representatives for so many years.

Mr. Speaker, God blessed him with a keen mind.

He has a wealth of ideas that keep pouring forth with more than we can keep up with, but he just keeps running in with new ideas and did so with such an enthusiasm that it was infectious, and many of us became very supportive of what he was doing and very admiring of that wealth of information that just kept pouring out of him.

He was blessed with an abundance of energy. We could not keep up with him there either. He outworked us, outhustled us. I said often, "If we take KEMP's adrenalin and divide it into a thousand parts, we could have a thousand JACK KEMPS running around, and, if we just had a tenth of the adrenalin and energy that JACK KEMP had, and his enthusiasm, think what we could accomplish."

Mr. Speaker, the ability of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] to communicate was extraordinary. He, as the previous speakers have said, has traveled to all our districts and came and talked to our people and spread his ideas and supported us in our campaigns. His willingness to jump on a plane and go anywhere, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] said, at any time, this was appreciated and helpful to so many of us and so important in terms of our ability to get here and to stay here and to be part of this body.

What am I going to remember? I am going to remember the time he came to Fort Wayne, IN. He had given, I believe, 35 speeches in 14 days. It was in the campaign season. He was absolutely exhausted. His stop in Fort Wayne for me was the last speech he was going to give. He was emotionally drained. He was tired. He wanted to get home. He had been on the road. It was a tough, tough grind. And he started out in a low-key way, and I thought, "Boy, JACK is just wiped out. He can't do it." But, after a couple of minutes of that, he stopped, took a deep breath, and instead of giving 5, 6, 8, 10 minutes, which he could have easily done and excused himself and caught a plane and gotten home, he took a deep breath and launched into one of the most inspiring, energetic, enthusiastic speeches I have ever heard. He just poured himself out in front of that audience in a professional way. He reached deep down for some reserve of energy that I did not think could possibly be there, and I will always remember that. That is an aspect of him and a quality that he has that I admire very much.

You are a fierce competitor. One thing I am going to remember is being on a tennis court with you as my partner playing two young kids who were college players. You and I had no business even being in the same building, let alone on the same court, and by the sheer will of your determination and competitive spirit, you dragged me along and got me involved in all that. As you remember, we came down to the last point of that match and these kids were lucky to get out of there with their lives.

I am going to remember your campaign for President, because I was there when you made that very first speech and announced your Presidency, and you did it with style and grace and class, and I was so proud to be associated with you.

I was there when you made that last speech of withdrawal, and you did that with an equal amount of grace and class, and I was proud to be standing there with you, and I will always remember that.

Finally, I will remember your family and your devotion to your family, your beautiful and supportive wife, Joanne, and your kids and the efforts you would make to drop everything and get to Jimmy's football game or Jeff's game or to catch it on TV or whatever you would do that you needed to do, extraordinary things that you needed to do to be supportive of what your family was doing, and your devotion to your kids, to your girls and to your sons and your intense involvement and interest in their lives. Despite all these other pressures that you had and all the other things that you had to do, you kept that as a priority. We admire you for that, and I admire you for that.

JACK, we will miss you, but we know that you are going to continue to be a force for change. Please do not go too far away. We need you. The Nation needs you, and we know you are going to be around to support us and lead us for a long time in the future.

God bless, JACK.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. Speaker, I will yield across the aisle at this point to one of JACK's good friends, the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS].

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding to me.

I am very proud and delighted to join my Republican colleagues in paying tribute to one of the finest people in the House of Representatives, JACK KEMP.

My wife, Annette, and I had the good fortune of knowing Joanne and JACK well.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing finer in American society than a couple as profoundly devoted to public service, as deeply motivated by the finest passions of patriotism and concern for their fellow human beings.

JACK is an extraordinary person. If one watches him in action, one cannot help but be struck by four qualities of this remarkable human being. They are integrity, intelligence, intellectual curiosity, and compassion.

JACK KEMP's integrity is legendary. His word is indeed his bond, and I suspect the fact that he is as respected on this side of the aisle as he is on the other speaks volumes for the name he so rightfully made for himself, not just in this body, but in the country as a whole.

His intelligence is incisive, his analytical ability penetrating. He has an intellectual curiosity which I as a former university professor only rarely saw in my finest graduate students. There is not a topic that he does not enjoy, that he does not play with like a bulldog plays with a fine bone. He examines it from all sides, and he is so open always to new knowledge, new interpretations, new approaches.

It has often been said that minds are like parachutes. They work only when they are open, and whoever coined that phrase must have had my friend, JACK KEMP, in mind, because here is a man deeply convinced of his own convictions, yet wide open to new ideas.

It is this intellectually stimulating ambivalence of JACK that makes him such a remarkably enjoyable companion, morning, noon, or night.

He passionately believes in his position, but he is genuinely eager to listen to others, to conflicting points of view, to new angles, to new interpretations, to new knowledge, to new information.

How refreshing this is, when so many of us are so bound to our own view that at best we make a polite gesture towards listening to the other side. Not JACK KEMP. He is truly prepared to learn new things, to learn new approaches, to keep himself open to intellectual growth.

I had the privilege of working with JACK on many issues, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps none was as poignantly JACK KEMP as our joint attempt to find and provide political asylum for a young woman athlete from mainland China. I read many years ago on the front page of the New York Times the story of a young Chinese tennis player by the name of Hu Na, who came to the United States under the auspices of the Chinese Communist tennis team, but wanted to make her break for freedom, and she went into hiding. I found out that she was hiding in my congressional district.

I wanted to make a bipartisan effort to provide a legal umbrella so she could stay in the United States. Without a moment's hesitation, I picked up the phone and called JACK KEMP. I said, "JACK, I want you to read the New York Times. I want you to read the story of Hu Na, a young Chinese tennis player, who is trying to live in this free and open society. I want to move to provide her political asylum. Will you cosponsor that measure for me?"

And without a moment's hesitation, JACK, of course, said "yes." It was one of our many joint bipartisan efforts over the course of many years which have made me come to respect him, appreciate him, admire him, and yes, love him as a friend.

There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that JACK KEMP's many contributions to this Nation will go on for many, many years to come. The House will be much poorer for his departure, but in other capacities in many ways he will make profound contributions for the benefit of the Nation that he loves so dearly.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to one of JACK's colleagues from the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, for yielding to me and for taking this special order for a very special man, a man who we will all miss, who leaves here from his very long and productive role in Congress, but opens up a new chapter in his life.

There are many chapters in the life of JACK KEMP, the former football hero, the family man, the Congressman, the aspirant for the Presidency of the United States, and who knows, maybe the successful aspirant one day.

JACK was a man of many talents, as has been described here today by many speakers, but he was unique, I suppose, and that is what has prompted so many speakers to stand here with us this afternoon.

He is a man of deep religious and philosophical conviction. He was indeed an outstanding Congressman, but that was because he was a man of ideas. His ideas virtually elected many of us on this side, and I can claim to have been one of those. I ran on JACK KEMP's ideas in 1976. I narrowly lost that election. I had another chance the next year and won my election to Congress because I was quoting so much of what JACK KEMP was saying back then as a relatively junior Congressman.

Well, he progressed and his ideas took hold. His ideas were the focal point and perhaps formed the birthplace, if you will, for the Reagan revolution.

Ronald Reagan ran for the Presidency on JACK KEMP's ideas and was elected. Many of Ronald Reagan's accomplishments over the last 8 years were in fact JACK KEMP's ideas. He was the father of the supply side movement. He advocated individual initiative, prompted productivity throughout this Nation through lower tax rates. He succeeded in having many of his ideas implemented, but his ideas never quit.

As has been pointed out, he talked, he thought out, he listened, he cajoled and he was enormously successful in getting many of his programs passed in this Congress. JACK KEMP leaves us in Congress today, but God willing, he with his wife, Joanne, and their kids supporting him as they always have, he will be back, not here in Congress necessarily, but to positions of leadership in the Nation. He has contributed already mightily to his party and to his country, but he has much yet to contribute in the future.

JACK KEMP is a leader. I personally wish him Godspeed in all his future endeavors and lots of success in the future. We need him and I am proud to call him a friend.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Let me just say, Mr. Speaker, before I recognize the next gentleman, that I know for our friend, JACK KEMP, the next gentleman's contribution is going to be especially important.

One of the things JACK has been proudest of in his service in Congress is his part, even though he was a strong partisan competitor, his ability to reach across the aisle and work with specific Members on the other side of the aisle, especially on problems that are not traditionally thought of as matters the Republican Party takes a great interest in, like the problems of the poor and disadvantaged.

I know that JACK's friendship for the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA] has been a special source of pride to him and he often has boasted in his speeches and private conversations about his ability to work with the gentleman from New York, so it is an especial pleasure for me to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota, for granting me these few minutes.

Mr. Speaker, today we are without a doubt paying tribute to one of the giants in this body. JACK KEMP has worked with us, and there is no question in my mind, I do not want to talk about him in the past tense, because the fact is, where is he going? He is leaving this body, but he is certainly not leaving the Washington area, and I think that is important.

I guess my relationship with him started back in 1980 during a period of time when Jimmy Carter was President of the United States. I remember standing on this floor, the Governor of Puerto Rico has just died, the ex-Governor of Puerto Rico had just died, Luis Munoz Marin. I was here talking about the progress that Puerto Rico had made over the last several decades, and all of a sudden this Republican, conservative Republican, I might add, gets up on the other side of the aisle and starts to talk about Luis Munoz Marin as if he was his first cousin. It became very clear to me at that particular moment that JACK KEMP's interest went far beyond his congressional district in Buffalo, that he knew a great deal of what was going on.

It was out of that discussion and on the loss of our former Governor of Puerto Rico, Munoz Marin, that he and I established a relationship, and it was from that relationship, Mr. Speaker, that we came up with the enterprise-zone bill. The enterprise-zone bill was finally enacted, I guess, 2 years ago. It came out of the Housing Subcommittee chaired by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ], and we had the enterprise zones which became a reality.

The fact of the matter is that while we did not get the revenue part of the bill completed, nonetheless, 37 States across this country identified with the enterprise zones and passed their own enterprise zones.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to report that through the efforts of JACK KEMP and myself that we were able to get this bill passed and get it out, but I think the history of this lesson is the following: It is that JACK KEMP and I, I am certain, on 90 percent of the issues, possibly 80 percent of the issues, we disagree. But when we can agree, why not?

I remember when we first introduced a bill, and I say this to my colleague from Minnesota, and some said, "Well, why are you doing that? Why are you introducing the bill with a Republican?" I said, "Look, 2 years from now, if the bill becomes law, they could care less whether it is Garcia, whether it is Kemp. The bottom line is that the law is there, and the people are benefiting," and it was interesting that that was my feeling at that time.

Mr. Speaker, to my Republican colleagues now, I want them to know the following: that in 1981 after Ronald Reagan was elected the White House came down very hard on us to change some of the parts of the enterprise-zone bill. They wanted to delete the minimum wage. They wanted to delete some OSHA regulations, and Jack Kemp and I had a long talk about it, and Jack Kemp said to me, and I will never forget this, he said, "We started this together, we are going to finish it together, and I do not care who the administration is, whether it is Democrat or Republican, that that is the way we wrote it and that is the way it is going to stay, and if they change any part of it, I am getting off, and I know you are going to get off." People do not realize that, but in 1981 that was a very hard thing for a guy like Jack Kemp to do, because of the pressures being brought upon by a first-term President, a person who came in and swept in a lot of Republicans where they had control of this body, and Jack Kemp stood tall.

I say that to the gentleman, because I think it is important. Out of that relationship, we were termed by some national magazines as the odd couple. I guess we were the odd couple. Here I am, a Democrat, a fairly liberal voting record, and Jack Kemp, a Republican, a fairly strong conservative record, and we banded together to get the enterprise-zone bill, and I say that to the gentleman, because there are many issues that Jack and I were involved in, and I think my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. Lantos], is right, whether it be on a question of Soviet Jewry, whether it be on a question of immigration, he was always there, and another part that I always remember was during the debate on the Martin Luther King holiday bill, it was Jack Kemp who led the forces on that side of the aisle to come forward and to support the Martin Luther King holiday, and it is a reality today.

I find it most interesting that that is the way this Congress should operate, not based on partisan politics, but what we consider to be right, what we consider to be the right thing to do, and Jack Kemp, to me, has always demonstrated that with me, and I can say this to all of the Members here, that as a Democrat, I can say that Jack Kemp is a person that worries me a little bit, because he is so good, but as a friend, and this is the key, as a friend, I am an admirer of Jack Kemp, and I always will be. I wish him well, and I wish his wife well, and I thank my colleague from Minnesota for giving me these few minutes to say what I have to say about the odd couple—Bob Garica and Jack Kemp.

Mr. Speaker, today we are paying tribute not only to one of the giants of this body but a friend of mine, Jack Kemp. Those of us who have worked with Jack over the years will surely miss him.

That is not to say that I have always agreed with Jack. I haven't, but I have always found him to be compassionate and fair. In 1980, Jack and I first began work on our enterprise zone legislation, that was the birth of the so-called "odd couple."

Yet, I first had contact with him even before our work on enterprise zones. I was speaking on the floor in tribute to Munoz Marin, the legendary former Governor of Puerto Rico, and Jack stood up and started praising him, talking about Operation Bootstrap and all that Munoz Marin had done for the people of Puerto Rico.

I looked across the Chamber and thought to myself, who is this guy? I thought he was a conservative Republican. What does he know about Munoz Marin? Well, that was also the last time I underestimated Jack Kemp.

He has proven time and time again that he is a man who cares about people. He is a man who does not use his political philosophy as an excuse to avoid helping the less fortunate.

I like Jack Kemp. I like his integrity. I like his sense of humor. I respect his intellect and sense of fair play. I also from time to time agree with his positions on issues. He has been a staunch defender of Israel and a tireless supporter of the fight to aid Soviet Jewry.

I'll tell you about one thing, Jack may be leaving this body, but we most certainly have not heard the last of him. As a staunch member of the Democratic Party that worries me a little, but as a friend and admirer of Jack Kemp the man, I wish him well.

Mr. WEBER. I thank my colleague and my friend from New York for his contribution.

If the rules permitted it, I would at this point yield to Catherine Hiler, but since she is not a Member, I have to yield to what I am sure would be Jack Kemp's second choice from the Hiler family, his very close and dear friend, my friend and classmate from Indiana, Jack Hiler.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think it is true that I would be Jack's second choice today. That does remind me of a time back in 1983 before I was married, and Jack had asked me to speak before one of his groups that he had come out periodically, and it was before a large group of people, and some members of my family happened to have come out to be part of that group. They were in the audience, and when I was getting ready to speak and when Jack was introducing me, he went through, as we all know how Jack can be very effusive in his praise and all the good things, and he went on to say, "My good friend is about to become married." I looked out into the audience where I had several members of my family whose chins dropped down to about their knees, because at that time, I had not even proposed to my wife, never mind alerted my family that I was getting married, so Jack has already taken credit for my marriage. I guess that is why he would rather have Catherine speaking today.

One of the things that I would like to talk about Jack Kemp, and others alluded to it, in 8 years of knowing Jack Kemp, I can never recollect having heard Jack Kemp, say a negative word about anyone in any type of personal sense. Jack, as we all know, had very strongly held views, and woe be to those who might have disagreed with him on one of those views that he held very strongly, but at no time did Jack Kemp ever allow that to impact on him personally or his relationships personally. Never would he, in sitting here listening to other Members debating, turn to someone and make a derogatory comment about a colleague. That just was not Jack's personality.

Jack feels very strongly about so many, many issues. He believes vehemently in his faith in democratic capitalism, and anyone who ever espoused a view at odds with Jack, obviously from an intellectual standpoint, Jack would disagree, but it never was personal. It never was allowed to degrade into something that would in any way hint that Jack might have a nasty word to say about someone.

I was one of those who ran for the first time in 1980, and Jack Kemp, came out to my district and spoke in my behalf. I ran on that platform that Jack Kemp espoused, as many mentioned, in 1976, 1978, and 1980, and when I ran in 1980, I ran on that platform.

I often wonder where Ronald Reagan's first term would have gone had Jack Kemp not been in the Congress for a few years before that paving the way for the supply-side economic revolution, paving the way for the Kemp-Roth tax cuts.

I think it is unquestionably the case that Jack Kemp's work in the trenches for a period of 4 to 6 years in going around the country campaigning for many, many Republican candidates, campaigning for his ideas, it is undoubtedly the case that he paved the way for Ronald Reagan to come in after his election and to articulate a policy that Jack had been so forcefully advocating for so many years, and that allowed us to score some of those very, very big victories in 1981 that resulted in the kind of economic growth that we have had over the last 72 months. I applaud JACK for that.

I would just close by saying two things. No. 1, not very many people appreciated his discourses on monetary policy, but, JACK, I want you to know I enjoyed each and every one of those speeches you gave on monetary policy and on the gold standard, and I want you to know that you are right on, even if no one else particularly cares, but I think it was an important discussion, and I know that you are going to carry that on at the Heritage Foundation.

The second thing that I would mention is that the group of us who were with JACK in his Presidential campaign after he had withdrawn from the race, he had us out, he and Joanne, to his home for dinner, and he gave each of us a book as a memento of the campaign. It was a book about Winston Churchill entitled "Wilderness Years," and I have had a chance to read that book. It was about the time in which Winston Churchill was excluded from his party's leadership, principally during the decade of the 1930's when so many very, very important policy discussions were taking place in Great Britain, and Churchill just was not a part of them within his party except kind of as an outsider. I think what JACK was telling us was that he, too, would probably have his wilderness years after his Presidential race ended, but JACK, like Winston Churchill had back in the 1930's that what carried Winston Churchill through was his belief in his cause, his belief in his mission, and the great friendship and support of so many of his close friends and associates.

We want you to know, JACK, that if there are any wilderness years for you, you can count on so many of us here in the House of Representatives and so many of your friends from around the country, you can count on us to be there to help support you, to help get you through those times when you may not think your voice is being heard. We will be there ready to pick up the banner again at the next time when you emerge in the national scene.

Good luck and God bless, JACK, Joanne.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman from Indiana very much.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield to another retiring Member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON].

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I remember the first time that I ever met JACK KEMP was in Geneva, NY, where I think he had spoken the previous evening to a membership of athletic leaders, and I had never realized, and I was not a fan of, the Buffalo Bills. I had not been aware of JACK KEMP, but I knew in that short time that he was a real figure, not only because of his athletic prowess, but also of his dramatic willingness to meet with young people and give them the drive and stamina that JACK was always recognized for.

As a former Member, not a former Member, but a former member of the New York caucus, I know that he was not always at hand on our meetings and our luncheons, but we knew that JACK KEMP was shooting for higher game and was looking for higher aspects, and all of us were aware that in the New York delegation we had a man who was outstanding as a representative of New York.

Mr. Speaker, we were proud to have him even though he was not able to come around as often as we would have liked to have seen him and could have bent his ear. Probably that was why he stayed away. He was afraid we might keep him for the entire hour and a half.

As one who has differed with JACK KEMP over my years in Congress, because I did not always agree with his economic program, but I think we have to recognize, as several other figures ahead have indicated, that the prosperity that we are enjoying today is a prosperity that was generated with the supply side of JACK KEMP.

The other aspect of my relationship with JACK KEMP was his fantastic capability and knowledge in defense. He was always strong for defense, and he and I had that in common, even if I was not able to understand the secrets of the Laffer curve, but I remember standing up on this side of the aisle on a number of programs of economic and military nature with JACK KEMP, and I always felt that I was doing the right thing for my conscience and the right thing for the country.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for his important contribution.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to inform my colleagues that my time is just about up, and there will be an additional special order taken out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER], and rather than have to interrupt someone, I would like to conclude my special order at this time and allow the gentleman from Pennsylvania to proceed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order this date.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GONZALEZ). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER PRECEDENCE

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. HORTON's special order precede mine on the same subject matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GONZALEZ). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE JACK KEMP

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding, and I will be glad to recognize him in a moment.

It is my pleasure now to yield to the other gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER].

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, taking a look at the big picture, I personally believe that JACK KEMP has been the most influential Member of Congress of our time. He has been the central congressional figure in the Reagan revolution, especially on the subject of getting America moving forward to fulfill her potential via tax policy and tax reform.

JACK KEMP first advanced the Kemp-Roth bill, a blueprint for the income tax reform package of 1981, but JACK was not just talking about tax rate reduction. JACK KEMP was talking about motivation, incentives, and progress.

JACK KEMP is the ultimate motivator. I think we can say that Ronald Reagan in some very large measure won the Presidency and won the incumbency on JACK KEMP's ideas. The Kemp-Kasten bill introduced in 1984 was the first version of another major tax reform proposal to provide $2,000 exemption and top rate below 30 percent, and President Reagan signed the provisions into law 2 years later as part of the 1986 Tax Reform Act.

Countries all over the world have picked up the Kemp banner on taxes and they have progressed, too. Today we note that our own Treasury Department, in seeking more stable exchange rates, has moved closer to the Kemp ideas on monetary policy. JACK has also been a central player in the Reagan doctrine, a doctrine on foreign policy that has sought to promote freedom and democracy, a doctrine of activist promotion of freedom and democracy. He was a central player in the strategic defense initiative and bringing the ideas of the strategic defense initiative back home to the American people. He has been out front in the debate to overcome doctrinaire policies which would leave Americans unprotected from nuclear holocaust. In 1985 he cosponsored and played a major role in enacting the first U.S. aid to freedom fighters in Southeast Asia, the Cambodian freedom fighters, and now that policy is bearing fruit.

We all know that he worked ceaselessly to encourage foreign aid programs, to promote progrowth economic policies. As a ranking member on the Committee on Appropriations, Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Program, JACK has been the key Republican in the House in support of increased and continued foreign aid to Israel.

Mr. Speaker, JACK KEMP's dedication to freedom and peace in Central America was unsurpassed in this House, and I know that JACK KEMP feels real personal pain to see Communist tryanny in Nicaragua remaining as he leaves office.

On the other hand, democratic resistance in Nicaragua can have faith that JACK KEMP will never cease to press forward on their behalf. That is JACK KEMP. As a member of the Helsinki Commission, on which I served as the ranking Republican, JACK has always been a leader in the movement to help Soviet Jewry and led to changes in the areas leading the way to changes in Soviet policy. The ideas of JACK KEMP, arising in the highest circles of this administration, are fundamental ideas behind the progress we have made in our relations with the Soviet Union and their movement toward glasnost, more openness, and perestroika restructuring.

JACK's belief in and the love of his country, his optimism and his power to reach out, his ability to cross all political boundaries, have brought him and his ideas into the mainstream of America and the Republican Party. JACK's strategy for winning not only includes bipartisan activism but a philosophy of freedom and hope and undying confidence in the American people to fulfill their destinies when given the chance.

JACK has always been a team player and still is. It is part of his nature. While a member of the San Diego Chargers, JACK first entered politics as a supporter of then California Gov. Ronald Reagan. After being traded to Buffalo he was the quarterback of the Bills' football team for 13 years, winning many awards, before he began his political career in 1970.

JACK initially won the New York congressional seat by 6,000 votes, working with Democrats as well as Republicans in his district with the team approach, and in the 1972 election JACK received 75 percent of the vote and a plurality of 100,000, an incredible showing. Even Ralph Nader, who seldom has good words for Republicans in efficiency ratings of congressional offices, gave JACK high scores for a tireless worker for his constituents and creative thinker for his party.

As we all know, if a colleague has so much outstanding success early on it can produce an aura that infects even Members of one's own party with the occupational disease called envy. However, JACK was not going to allow that to happen. JACK became a persuasive speaker and a tireless campaigner for Republican candidates all over the Nation. He helped me in my district, over the years, four times, the Lehigh Valley of Pennsylvania, blue-collar, ethnic, labor-dominated, Democratic district, loves JACK KEMP.

It was not long before JACK KEMP was elected as chairman of the Republican Conference, the third ranking Republican leadership post in the House. He earned the right. He then earned the privilege of running for President of the United States. In the article "Seriously, Now, a Jock for President" Geoffrey Norman summarized, "Pressure is something an athlete, especially a professional, learns not merely to live with but to use to advantage." He added, "A final asset that a ballplayer brings to politics is an appreciation for the intricate chemistry of teamwork."

Indeed, JACK is a man of ideas who works with others as a team to translate those ideas into reality. The American people have been beneficiaries. It was a pleasure to work with JACK on key issues and to serve as an original member of the Kemp-Core group and as an adviser in his Presidential campaign task force on science and technology issues.

In fact, recently JACK strongly urged all his former Presidential advisers to get active on behalf of the Vice President and our prodefense, progrowth and profamily value movement. He wrote to all of us regarding the Bush campaign, stating, "We must support his efforts to set the agenda for the 1990's." He also emphasized regarding a Dukakis effort, "His program of furloughs, fear and failure, furloughs for criminals, fear of America's responsibilities, and obsession with economic failure, is not what America needs."

All of us here today know that JACK was proud of his adroit and compelling legislative accomplishments which he obtained within the framework, once again, of the team spirit. Although JACK has campaigned hard for Jeff Bell in the New Jersey campaign of 1978 for the Senate, it does not stop him from working closely with Bell's former opponent, Senator BILL BRADLEY, on tax and monetary policy. JACK worked with our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, the gentleman from the South Bronx District of New York City, Mr. GARCIA, and WALTER FAUNTROY, representing Washington, DC, on ideas such as urban enterprise zones and urban home studying, the tenant purchase of public housing.

Mr. Speaker, the list goes on and on. We will all be following JACK and his new assignment with the Heritage Foundation and in anticipation of those great ideas which he will activate and pursue and which we know he will come to us seeking support for.

To be helpful to all of us in this regard, I prepared a summary of JACK's initiatives, which I include at the end of my remarks.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I emphasize the strong words in defining the problems of the American family that JACK put forth.

> Of all the challenges we face at home, none stand more menacing to the future of our democracy than the threats and the breakup of families and, in all too many cases, their failure even to form; we see the decline of discipline and erosion of values in education; the danger of sexually transmitted diseases; the loss of many young people to lives of crime, drugs, and even to suicide.

JACK was the only Presidential candidate in the primaries to develop a comprehensive family policy including Social Security.

A further personal view, my wife Edie and I and our two children, Jason and Christina, cherish our friendship with the Kemps and respect their strong family ties. JACK has a deep respect and love of his wife, Joanne and their four children, Jeffrey, Jennifer, Judith, and James. He and Joanne provided a fertile ground for cherished family values to take root in their own household.

JACK, it has been a privilege to work with you, and I convey my best wishes to you and the Heritage Foundation. I know that we will all continue to benefit from your efforts as you press forward for progressive change at home and abroad, and a special moment with JACK and his family after the end of his presidential campaign, JACK gave some of his friends in the Core group a copy of the Martin Gilbert biography of Winston Churchill, "The Wilderness Years." JACK, we who know you and who love you encourage you never to lose that energy, that drive, that enthusiasm, and that utterly ridiculous but beautiful commitment to principle. Keep the light shining, JACK, your time will come.

Congressman Kemp is a staunch supporter of democratic resistance movements throughout the world, where people are striving to achieve the fundamental political, economic, and human rights enjoyed by Americans. He believes it is essential that the U.S. challenge the efforts of the Soviet Union and its allies such as Cuba, Nicaragua, Vietnam and Libya to destabilize other nations.

He is a leader in the efforts to provide military and humanitarian aid to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters. He recently introduced the bipartisan Nicaraguan Freedom Act of 1988 to provide $57.14 million in aid to the Nicaraguan Democratic Resistance, including $30 million in military aid. He has strongly supported aid to El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and others threatened by Cuban/Sandinista subversion.

He has consistently supported U.S. assistance to the noncommunist resistance forces in Mozambique, Angola, Afghanistan, and Cambodia.

Congressman Kemp believes that a successful defense policy is based on peace through strength to protect our freedom and assure our defenses and our vital interests.

He has been a vigorous supporter of accelerating the development and deployment of the Strategic Defense Initiative [SDI] system. In 1987, he offered an amendment to the DOD Authorization bill to require full-scale development and testing of the SDI systems to achieve early deployment.

He has supported essential modernization programs to assure that we have effective deterrent forces, both nuclear and conventional.

He supports sound arms control steps requiring full compliance with existing agreements and based on equitable reductions and effective verification.

He believes that the U.S. should seek to ensure that this country and our allies do not provide credit and technology which the Soviets can use for their arms buildup and economic reforms. He has introduced legislation to require U.S. banks to make public the number and financial conditions of untied, low-interest loans made to Soviet bloc countries.

Congressman Kemp is a strong supporter of one of this country's staunchest allies, Israel.

He introduced the Anti-Terrorism Act of 1987 to shut down operations of the Palestine Liberation Organization [PLO] in the U.S. by making it illegal to provide funds or services to this terrorist group. He has called for the termination of the PLO's observer status at the United Nations. He also has proposed reducing U.S. contributions to the UN by the amount used for expenses by pro-PLO groups.

He has called for reducing U.S. funds to the United Nations until that body revokes its resolution declaring that Zionism is a form of racism.

He has consistently opposed the sale of sophisticated military arms to Arab countries that refuse to recognize Israel's right to exist.

He helped lead the successful effort in 1981 to make Raoul Wallenberg an honorary U.S. citizen, and he also is working to establish a Raoul Wallenberg Memorial. Mr. Wallenberg, who helped save thousands of Jews during World War II from the Nazis, was taken into custody by the Soviet Union after the war and has not been heard from since.

He took the lead in efforts to prevent the removal from the United States of Miroslav Medvid, the Ukrainian sailor who sought asylum in the United States in 1986 and was turned away.

He has been a staunch supporter every year of resolutions on Solidarity Sunday, Helsinki Human Rights Day, Andrei Sakharov Honor and Freedom Day, Baltic Freedom Day, Greek Independence Day, Baltic Freedom Day, Religious Freedom Week, and Jewish Heritage Week.

In 1988, he joined in urging the Soviet Union to proclaim a general amnesty for imprisoned Christians and allow Christians to practice their faith in celebration of the millenium of the Christianization of Kievan-Rus.

In 1981, he was active in efforts to help the "Siberian Seven," two Pentecostal families who sought refuge in the American Embassy in Moscow because of oppression in the Soviet Union.

A PRO-FAMILY FOUNDATION

Congressman Kemp believes in the sanctity of human life and has worked diligently to reverse pro-abortion policies.

He supports a constitutional amendment to protect the right to life of unborn children.

He has consistently supported and voted for the Hyde amendment to ban the use of federal funds for abortions except where the life of the mother would be endangered.

He introduced legislation to prevent organizations that perform or refer for abortions from receiving federal family planning funds.

Through his position on the Appropriations Committee, he successfully barred U.S. funds from going to any organization that participates in a program of coercive abortion. This results in funds being cut off from U.N. organizations that supported a coercive abortion program in the Peoples Republic of China.

He has supported legislation prohibiting health care facilities from permitting handicapped babies to die through deliberate neglect.

Congressman Kemp believes that the tax code should reflect the fact that children are our greatest resource.

His tax reform proposals to double the personal exemption and increase the earned income tax credit for low-income families were incorporated into the 1986 tax reform act.

To encourage families to adopt children, he has proposed allowing families to deduct all adoption expenses.

To help families pay for child care, he has called for changing the existing child care credit into a universal refundable credit available to all families with pre-school children. He also has supported increasing the amount of expenses which could be used in computing the credit.

Congressman Kemp believes that every child should have access to a quality education in order to achieve a better future.

Recognizing the need to improve the quality and standards of public schools, he has worked to increase funding for magnet schools.

To encourage families to save for higher education expenses, he has supported the creation of tax-deferred education savings accounts.

He has supported a constitutional amendment to permit prayer in public schools.

He has been a strong supporter of tuition tax credits.

Congressman Kemp believes that we need a comprehensive national strategy against AIDS based on the principles of caring and responsibility. He introduced the AIDS Prevention Act of 1987 to establish federal grants to states for mandatory, routine or voluntary testing programs; counseling; confidential contact tracing, with stiff penalties for violations of confidentiality; education; and health care planning.

Congressman Kemp is a longtime advocate of strengthening laws against child pornography. He introduced legislation to give investigators and prosecutors additional tools to prosecute offenses. He also has proposed requiring mandatory life sentence for kidnapping children and stiff minimum sentences for repeat offenders of child pornography laws.

Congressman Kemp believes that an effective anti-drug program must include stiffer penalties for users and sellers, a stepped-up international drug control effort, and improvements in interdiction. He supports a death penalty for drug kingpins, creation of a multinational strike force to combat drug trafficking and production, military assistance to countries trying to eradicate their drug crops, and use of the Armed Forces in drug interdiction.

FULL EMPLOYMENT WITHOUT INFLATION

Congressman Kemp believes that lower tax rates are essential to increase the incentives for work, investment, and savings, all necessary for the strong economic growth that allows our country to make progress toward its goals. He has led the successful fight to lower tax rates from 70 percent in 1980 to 28 percent in 1988. His efforts to lower tax rates, simplify the Tax Code, and protect taxpayers from tax increases due to inflation have benefited workers, families, and the poor.

Many features of this "Fair and Simple Tax" plan were incorporated into the 1986 tax reform act, including a top rate of 28 percent, a $2,000 personal exemption, and an expanded earned income tax credit for the working poor.

In 1981, his proposal to reduce tax rates by 25% across-the-board was enacted into law.

He led the opposition to the tax increases of 1982, 1983, and 1984. He also supported efforts to repeal some of the more burdensome provisions of these bills, including the withholding on interest and dividend income.

He introduced the Plant-Opening and Jobs Creation Act of 1988 which provides tax incentives for new jobs, new investment, and new training. These incentives include a reduction in the capital gains tax rate to 15 percent, a repeal of the 1990 payroll tax increase, and continuation of the tax-free treatment of educational assistance to workers. The bill also provides tax incentives to create new jobs and invest in the inner cities. The bill incorporates his pro-growth trade proposal to negotiate a North American Free Trade Area as well as reciprocal expanded trade agreements with our other trading partners.

To spur the creation of investment capital in small businesses, in 1981 Congressman Kemp supported cutting the capital gains tax rate by 50 percent on the sale of equity of small businesses.

In 1975, he introduced the Jobs Creation Act, which increased incentives for savings and investment. Among the bill's proposals were tax credits for personal savings and investment, increases in the amounts individuals could put into retirement savings accounts, an exclusion from gross income of dividends, a partial exclusion of capital gains, a reduction in the corporate tax rate, and an increase in the investment tax credit.

He has been a strong supporter of tax-deferred retirement savings accounts, which would help Americans enjoy a more secure, comfortable retirement. He has proposed increasing the amount that can be put into these accounts, as well as allowing spouses who remain at home to have their own accounts.

A PRO-GROWTH TRADE POLICY

Congressman Kemp believes the answer to our trade problems is to tear down trade barriers and expand trade. He believes expanded trade results in stronger economic growth, more jobs, and a higher standard of living for all Americans.

The American Trade, Growth and Employment Promotion Act of 1987 reflects his strong free-trade agenda. It requires the President to enter into negotiations to establish a North American Free Trade Area comprising the United States, Canada, Mexico, and the Caribbean Basin countries. The President also would receive new authority to negotiate expanded trade agreements with our trading partners, making special provisions for poorer developing nations. The bill requires a consumer impact statement for all trade legislation so that the American people know the costs—or benefits—of the legislation.

He was a strong supporter of the successful negotiations to establish a free trade agreement between the United States and Israel.

He has been a strong supporter of the Caribbean Basin Initiative designed to help spur economic growth and expanded trading opportunities with these countries.

He has been a long-time supporter of creating a free trade area between the United States and Canada.

A NEW WAR ON POVERTY

Congressman Kemp believes that one of our greatest challenges is to expand economic opportunity to all people, including those left behind by the recent economic expansion. He believes that the American dream is for all people, and that all Americans should have a decent job, be able to own a home in a safe neighborhood, and look forward to a better life for themselves and their children.

To encourage economic growth and job creation in our inner cities and poor rural areas, Congressman Kemp has introduced enterprise zone legislation, designed to "greenline" these areas by providing tax incentives for entrepreneurs and small business owners who create jobs in enterprise zones.

His proposals to empower residents of public housing to manage their own projects and to realize the dream of homeownership by purchasing their units at a discount were included in the 1987 housing authorization bill. He believes that the poor living in public housing should have the right to buy their own homes. His proposal would allow public housing residents to purchase their units at a deep discount with a low-interest mortgage.

In order to help the poor and minorities receive the basic skills needed for vocational education, he has proposed making community-based organizations eligible for vocational education grants.

SOUND MONEY

Congressman Kemp has been at the forefront of efforts to reform our monetary system to achieve stable, honest money. He believes that a dollar should be worth as much tomorrow as it was yesterday.

He supports the development of a modernized gold standard to restore balanced budgets, exchange rate stability, and low real interest rates. He has called for prompt disclosure of monetary policy decisions by the Federal Open Market Committee to end uncertainty among investors and the American people.

He opposed the elimination of fixed exchange rates for international currencies, as well as the abolition of the official price of gold.

A SOUND SOCIAL SECURITY SYSTEM

Congressman Kemp believes that Social Security must remain the bedrock of retirement security to protect economically vulnerable older citizens and the family.

In order to protect Social Security benefits from being subject to budget cuts, he has called for removal of the Social Security trust funds from the unified Federal budget.

He introduced legislation to repeal the Social Security earnings test which limits the amount of outside earned income Social Security beneficiaries can earn without having their benefits reduced.

With surpluses in the Social Security trust fund higher than expected, he has proposed repealing the 1988 and 1990 payroll tax increases, which adversely affect small businesses and low-income workers the most.

He has supported repeal of the 1983 provision which requires Social Security recipients to include tax-exempt interest in computing the amount of tax owed on Social Security benefits.

PROTECTING OUR NATURAL RESOURCES

Congressman Kemp believes we can protect our natural resources without impeding strong economic growth.

To reduce pollutants which contribute to acid rain, one of our most serious environmental problems, he introduced legislation to reduce emissions of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide.

Believing that a plentiful, secure supply of domestic energy is crucial to our national security, he supports deregulating natural gas, eliminating government interference in energy markets, and creating additional incentives for new oil and gas drilling, as well as maintaining marginal wells. He also supports environmentally sound drilling of new oil and gas sources in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

He opposed government controls on energy during the 1970s, arguing that they helped create artificial shortages in energy supplies as well as higher prices. He opposed quotas on imported oil, higher gasoline taxes, and price controls on domestic oil.

He was an early proponent of repealing the windfall profits tax.

He was one of the leaders of the successful effort in 1985 to eliminate government subsidies to large corporations involved in commercial development of synthetic fuels.

He has supported tax credits to encourage the recycling of hazardous wastes.

FISCAL RESTRAINT

Congressman Kemp believes that restraining federal spending, along with strong economic growth and a stable monetary policy, are the keys to reducing the federal deficit.

He opposes lumping all of the government spending bills together in an omnibus continuing appropriations resolution, which forces the President to accept all of Congress's spending decisions or risk shutting down the government. He supports legislation requiring a 60% majority vote of both Houses of Congress for passage of continuing resolutions.

He has supported a constitutional amendment giving the President a line-item veto in appropriations bills.

In 1977, he proposed eliminating inactive and overlapping federal programs, requiring programs to be reauthorized at least every 4 years, and establishing a zero-base review of government programs every 4 years.

OTHER SIGNIFICANT INITIATIVES

Congressman Kemp helped win approval of a legal public holiday honoring the birthday of Martin Luther King, Jr. He also serves on the Martin Luther King, Jr. Federal Holiday Commission.

Congressman Kemp supported legislation which presumed that certain diseases developed by Vietnam veterans exposed to Agent Orange in Southeast Asia are service-related. This presumed service connection enables these Vietnam veterans to receive disability benefits.

Congressman Kemp has proposed tougher penalties for criminals who use a gun to commit a felony and also strict mandatory penalties for the use of armor-piercing bullets.

Congressman Kemp has called for repeal of the punitive sanctions imposed on employers who hire illegal aliens.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his very personal and sincere comments about our good friend and colleague, JACK KEMP.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE].

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As previous speakers have defined this friend of ours from Buffalo, NY, as an arsenal of integrity, an arsenal of intelligence, an arsenal of energy. All are correct.

I recall about 3 years ago when chambers of commerce, from my area in North Carolina, Greensboro, High Point, and Winston-Salem, came on their annual excursion to the Potomac, and JACK KEMP agreed to be the speaker for that group as a favor to me. He arrived in a timely way after he had made nine stops and speeches previously that day from New York all the way down to Washington.

As one of the previous speakers indicated, he was filled with zeal and enthusiasm that night, in spite of his tiring day, and after he left our meeting he announced to us that he was scheduled to appear as a spectator at a football game, and I think he was to see his son or the son of a friend who was to play that night. That indicates the boundless energy that this man possesses and exhibits.

Earlier this year and last year, many Members on this side of the aisle, as the gentleman from New York knows, underwent great frustration because we had many candidates for President who were outstanding candidates, many whom we could support enthusiastically. The three whom I knew the best are Vice President GEORGE BUSH, Senator BOB DOLE, Congressman JACK KEMP. I could have been comfortable supporting any of the three. I elected to go on the Bush wagon.

□ 1600

And I worked enthusiastically for GEORGE BUSH's nomination. Shortly after it became apparent that the Vice President would be our standard bearer, JACK KEMP came to me on the floor of this House and he said, "HOWARD, if there is anything I can do in your district to help you, let me know."

Now keep in mind I had just been trying to beat his britches off for the past 4 or 5 months and he knew that. But he was willing, ready, and able to come to my district to help me.

I think that is the kind of man he is.

And as has been said earlier today, he will be missed on this floor.

JACK KEMP, we wish you, Joanne and your family Godspeed, smooth sailing and many happy years ahead.

Mr. HORTON. I thank the gentleman from North Carolina. I just add to what the gentleman said with regard to the candidates that we had for President that JACK KEMP is not here today because he is in Alabama speaking on behalf of Vice President GEORGE BUSH.

Mr. COBLE. That does not surprise me.

Mr. HORTON. That shows the way he feels.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, BOB WALKER, who yielded me this time so that we could handle this special order.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman very much and thank him for yielding briefly to me to talk about my friend, JACK KEMP, because I have been impressed for the entire time JACK has been in the House. I was here as a staff member when JACK first came.

What always struck me about JACK KEMP is the fact that he had a sense of history. There are very few people who can really understand where they are in terms of the historic changes taking place around them. JACK seemed to be one of those special people that had a sense for history, who understood this this Nation in the latter part of the 20th century is going through a tremendous period of turmoil as the world is because there is a great change taking place in our economics, in our politics, in our social structures.

He tried to find a way that politics could respond positively to that change and he came upon the theme that if you look back through history, as has always been true, that when change was inevitable men were best in politics if they moved toward the concept of opportunity.

So JACK took opportunity as his cornerstone and began to look for ways that public policies could be developed that would allow this Nation to expand the opportunities of individuals, expand the opportunities for investment, expand the opportunities to grow into the future.

As a result of that sense of vision, as a result of that sense of knowing where this Nation lies in history and what role he might play in it, he has become one of those few people in the House who really makes a difference in changing the Nation.

Very few of us, as a part of our work in the House, get a chance to truly change the Nation, not just affect a couple of pieces of legislation. Most of us are very grateful if we leave here having done that, but to change the course of history as a part of what you do in the House, that is a real achievement.

JACK KEMP is one of those few people who did that.

He did it because he was of enough stature to change a major political party. JACK has often told those of us who spend time with him that you know, you can be a party of the thesis, or you can be a party of the antithesis; you can be a party that is progressive enough to talk about ideas and talk about how you change things for the better or you can be a party simply that complains about that which is."

Now, JACK understood that under the liberal welfare state policies we have been following for 50 years, things were going wrong. He knew it was not good enough just to complain about the liberal welfare state. He know what you had to do was was that you had to have an alternative.

So he put together the concepts that are now called the Conservative Opportunity Society, concepts for lower tax rates, concepts for individual advancement, concepts where everyone from the bottom up benefits from the fact that you go and move forward into the future.

Well, those are historic achievements, to change the direction of history, to change the direction of a party I think is something which is very, very important to the future.

But I think it is also important as we do this special order on the floor that we do not talk in the past tense because I am convinced that what we have seen in the House, on the House floor, and what we have seen in JACK's career is just act one of a multiact play. Who knows how many acts there are to run. But we know that he is a leader of historic dimensions.

He is someone who has already inspired a new generation of political leaders, will continue to inspire new generations of political leaders, and, I am convinced, will play an increasingly important role in this country's history as we change and grow toward the 21st century.

I appreciate the opportunity that the gentleman has given me to say these few words.

Mr. HORTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. BEREUTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. As is the case with an overwhelming number of Members of men and women of this House, I have great respect, admiration, and appreciation for JACK KEMP, for his contributions to this body, and for his contributions to the Nation; a respect for his personal integrity and for his unrestrained enthusiasm about the opportunities for America and for every American within the society.

JACK KEMP was an inclusionary leader, an inclusionary politician; that is to say he preached, more importantly he practiced the politics of inclusion. For that we owe him a debt of thanks.

But I think that JACK KEMP made an especially important contribution to the country and to this institution because JACK KEMP is a man of ideas.

JACK's agenda was always based upon ideas and a sense of idealism that is entirely consistent with our country and with this institution.

Jack, I wanted to say extemporaneously these remarks about you, a man of ideas. That is why you stand out here above all else in my judgment. We will miss you here, Jack Kemp, but more importantly this institution will miss you. We are poorer for your retirement from this body. Personally and institutionally I say to you Jack Kemp, thank you, thank you for the country, thank you for your contributions to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HORTON. I thank the gentleman for his very sincere remarks.

I am sure JACK KEMP appreciates it. I now yield to the gentleman from California, HENRY WAXMAN.

Mr. WAXMAN. I want to thank the gentleman very much for yielding to me in order to give me an opportunity to say a few words about JACK KEMP. I hope I do not ruin his reputation by paying tribute to him. Obviously, we come from different political parties and presumably different philosophies.

Mr. HORTON. I am sure he will feel very honored as a result for your taking the floor to commend him.

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman.

We have different philosophies on many issues, economic and political; but one thing that I want to single out in terms of the contribution JACK KEMP has made to Congress, to the American Government, and to our values is his strenuous effort on behalf of human rights. He has been a champion of the fact that human rights and human freedom are important, not only in this country but around the world and our Nation has to stand for fighting for a people that are oppressed in different parts of this world.

I had the privilege of being with him in the Soviet Union when we met with some of the leaders of that country and he spoke out with the rest of us about the oppression of Soviet Jews, Soviet Christians, other people, minority groups within the Soviet Union, various ethnic groups that were being pushed into assimilation where their uniqueness and differences and beliefs and freedoms were being obliterated.

JACK KEMP has never wavered on behalf of fighting for freedom for people, for their rights. And it is a remarkable fact that with all the activities for which he has been paid tribute this evening, from economic activities to political involvement, that he had so broad a range a scope of his participation on the issues that are important to the American people.

I did not realize it until we came here to Washington that JACK went to high school in my district. He went to Fairfax High School. My wife attended Fairfax along with JACK's brother.

So, I had some sense of kinship because he did at one time live in Los Angeles.

I have admired him, I have admired his integrity, his vigor, his sincerity, his willingness to take on issues and to fight for what he believes in.

I want to wish JACK and Joanne the very best.

Mr. HORTON. I thank the gentleman for his very glowing tribute and thank him for taking the time to express his personal thoughts with regard to JACK.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to another gentleman from California, JERRY LEWIS.

Mr. LEWIS of California. I thank the gentleman in the well [Mr. HORTON], and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER], for this effort today on behalf of our collegue, JACK KEMP. I am here to spend a few moments with you to try to share and communicate my feelings about our dear friend, JACK KEMP, and I want you to know, JACK and Joanne, that I come here with nary a note. I do not intend to revise and extend my remarks. So, what you see is what you are going to get.

Now I first heard, Joanne, about your husband when he was a young man playing games at Occidental College. He was not just playing games, he was making a lot of people look silly because he was so talented at what he did. He went further in his career at San Diego. I watched him then. And it was with no small sense of loss or indeed no small sense of envy that we saw the Buffalo Bills benefit from this incredible talent as it matured. It is that talent and it is the maturity that I would like to talk a little bit about today.

I wanted to mention to you, JACK, that it was in 1955, the summer of 1955 that I first decided for certain that I would be involved in public affairs. I had the chance in that summer to travel to the country of India in one of the very early people-to-people programs that preceded the Peace Corps where 14 students per summer would travel to Southeast Asia, to try to go from village to village, to communicate a bit about America to those Indian college students.

During that summer I presumed at the beginning that one day if I was involved in public affairs that I would do so as a Democrat. And at the end of the summer I was convinced that one day politics would be a piece of my work and I knew I would do so most likely as a Republican, largely because it was one thing for me in those days to look in the magazines or look at a movie newsreel and see young people who were starving to death, people who did not have a chance or opportunity in life. It was another thing entirely to have the experience of traveling to India, walking down a mud pathway and step aside rather than step upon a small child who was lying in the mud, watch his mother brush the flies away as he died literally from starvation. That forced me for the first time in my life to begin to think through why the difference between a country like India with so much potential and a country like the United States; why but for the grace of God I might have been there or you might have been there instead of exercising our capabilities here in this country.

When I arrived in the Congress of the United States, I heard a little more about JACK KEMP. Ten-ten-ten was the news in those days; he wanted to cut, squeeze, and trim along with Ronald Reagan. If we could cut back the amount of money the Federal Government received we were pretty well assured we would spend a little bit less. Indeed, his voice was being heard very effectively across the land.

But I must say, beyond football I did not really know exactly what to expect. I got to know JACK best when a couple of years after that I had the privilege of moving to the Committee on Appropriations and JACK suddenly became the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations. That bill decides what we are going to spend and how we are going to spend it in terms of foreign assistance throughout the world. A football player who had come to Congress, a fellow who talked a lot about taxes, suddenly became a real part of my everyday life.

Quickly I found JACK KEMP to be not just a quick study, instead, a very, very talented, caring, passionate man who wanted to make a difference, not just here at home but for people around the world. JACK provided a new kind of leadership on our Subcommittee on Foreign Operations which had Republicans reaching out to make a difference in the world of nations.

□ 1615

JACK in his passion for ideas and issues was willing to go the extra mile to impact the direction we might take as a country. In the 20 years now that I have been involved in public affairs, I have had one person come to my district to speak on my behalf. That one person was JACK KEMP, and the reason was not because we cannot raise money without speakers in San Bernardino County but, rather, because here was a very unique fellow that I wanted my people to get a piece of, to see firsthand, because he had the audacity to talk about enterprise and opportunity and the importance of the individual in our society. He truly believes that the difference in America in terms of the world is that each individual is important, that each individual being able to exercise his talent, if indeed he is willing to, will make a difference in the future of mankind.

JACK KEMP reflects that in his daily work here in the House. He has not just made a difference in the House of Representatives; he has made a difference in our country and has impacted the world. That has been said already. But let me say to Jeff, to Judith, to Jennifer, and to Jimmy, I knew your dad long before he knew you, but indeed he is a human being who cares not just about his family, as he does so deeply, he cares about the state of mankind, and he knows that the difference will be each individual exercising his talent and government allowing those individuals to exercise their talents on behalf of all of us, our party, our families, and indeed our country.

God bless you, JACK and Joanne, in the years ahead. We look not to that which you have done in the past but to the next chapter in what has already been a fantastic book that details the story of your lives.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS]. Like JACK KEMP, he said that right good, and he did not have any notes.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS] has just made reference to JACK's lovely wife, Joanne, and I do not think this would be complete if someone did not mention the respect and affection that I think all congressional wives have for Joanne Kemp. She is a terrific lady, with firmly held convictions and is very competent and very able of expressing those convictions. She has been a great asset to JACK in his political career as a helpmate.

So I would hope that remarks about Joanne would be included in this special order as well, in addition to these lovely remarks that have been expressed about our departing colleague, the gentleman from Buffalo.

We have a situation in central Illinois that occurs once a year. It is a very prestigious invitation for anyone in public life. It comprises an assembly of about 800 business leaders from throughout central Illinois, and they choose who they want to come annually to speak to them. The speakers throughout history have included Presidents of the United States, Vice Presidents of the United States, Members of this body and Members of the other body, and many Cabinet members as well.

I had the pleasure of accompanying JACK KEMP to this event a few years ago when they extended the invitation to him and he was kind enough to accept it. It was a very rare experience, I would say to my colleague, the gentleman from New York, because JACK talked extemporaneously and talked about the things he has seen in his travels across America. He talked about the poverty he had seen, and he talked about it so eloquently that there were misty eyes throughout that room of 800 men and women.

Then he talked about the things that Government could do, the changes that Government could make that were referred to by our colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER]. And he had people smiling. He was also humorous. I remember one line. He said, "If you took all the economists in this country and laid them end to end"—then he paused and said, "wouldn't that be wonderful?" Everybody broke out in applause. There apparently was not a high degree of respect in that audience for members who pursue the economic sciences.

JACK made them laugh, he made them cry, he made them applaud, and when he was through, they gave him a standing ovation that went on for several minutes.

As I said, he did it all extemporaneously, and it was a wonderful performance. It all came from the heart. It was all very real and all very sincere.

I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] was entirely correct when he said, "This is only act I," that we will certainly see more of many activities, political and otherwise, on the part of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP], who is leaving this body to go on and do other things.

Mr. Speaker, I have certainly enjoyed my service with him. I certainly have respected his leadership abilities, and I thank the gentleman from New York for having this special order.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] for his comments, and I know that JACK will appreciate them very much, too.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the final speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER], who took a special order along with me to honor our colleague, JACK KEMP.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding.

I know we have had a lot of speakers, and we are almost ready to proceed with the business of the House.

I did not get an opportunity to say much on my own time, so I hope the membership will allow me to make a few comments in concluding this special order that has been going on now for the better part of an hour and a half, I believe.

First of all, let me say that it was really a tremendous experience for me to listen to our colleagues, and I want JACK and Joanne and his family to know that every time I heard DAN COATS or HENRY HYDE or anybody else speak for the last hour and a half, I regretted that I had not spoken first because I kept thinking, "That's what I wanted to say." So I want to associate myself first with all the fine remarks of the Members who preceded me.

Mr. HORTON. That is a good move.

Mr. WEBER. Second of all, let me say that there are a couple of things that did not get hit hard enough, and just as a cleanup batter in this order, I want to make reference to those interests. JACK has been lauded here as a pioneering force in economic growth for opportunity, for peace through strength, and for SDI. That is all very true. But there are a couple of areas that were not mentioned that I know are very close to his heart. Outside of this country and across the ocean, on the other end of the Mediterranean Sea, there is a nation filled with people who are all very grateful to JACK KEMP. I am talking about the State of Israel. One of JACK's consuming interests has been a strong, unswerving, absolute dedication to the American-Israeli partnership, and all across this country there are many people who are aware of that and grateful to him. Through his leadership on the Foreign Operations Committee, he was a leader in trying to convince many often reluctant Republicans and conservatives to support foreign aid and particularly to support aid for Israel. He opposed arms sales, and at every stage of the debate he was a strong advocate of Israel's interests as being in America's interests.

In addition to that, let me say that one of our colleagues who is not able to be with us today but who, I believe, has submitted some comments for the RECORD, is Congressman CHRIS SMITH of New Jersey. The gentleman from New Jersey is chairman of the Congressional Pro-Life Caucus. That is a controversial issue, Mr. Speaker, but it is an issue that should not go unmentioned, because in his years in the Congress, along with HENRY HYDE who spoke earlier, there has been no one who has been a more forceful exponent and proponent of the rights of the unborn than JACK KEMP.

One of the pioneer policy changes in this administration was the articulation of a new population policy in Mexico City a couple of years ago. JACK KEMP was the architect of that policy shift. And as is typical of JACK, his approach to the abortion issue, which again is a controversial issue, is not a nay-saying, negative approach. And in articulating support for the Mexico City policy, JACK's point was that people are a resource, a positive, vital resource. He comes at that issue as positively as he does with so many others.

Finally, let me just talk for a minute or two about JACK on the personal level. As I said to my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON], I had some tremendous opportunities as a supporter of JACK KEMP for President to talk about him, and people often asked me, what was the thing that I wanted to impart most about JACK at the personal level? And I made a small contribution, I believe, to JACK's campaign for President in that I think I was the first one to suggest to a report from the Washington Post that there was an analogy to be made to a great Democratic politician from my State, and that politician was Hubert Humphrey. I said, "Hubert Humphrey was known, of course, as the Happy Warrier, and," I said to David Broder of the Washington Post, "I think JACK KEMP has a lot in common in that area with Hubert Humphrey."

I meant that not philosophically but in the sense that in the core of Hubert Humphrey's being there was nothing dark, there was nothing evil, there was nothing malicious, there was just a good man who loved politics, loved the clash of ideas, and really bore no ill will to the people who disagreed with him.

In private as well as public conversations, I have seen that very strongly in JACK KEMP. To be sure, he is a competitor, a fierce competitor, and to be sure, he is one who believes passionately in his point of view and, with some passion, that people who are on the other side of his point of view are wrong, but always with a strong, deep sense that every individual has a tremendously important contribution to make, and that every point of view is legitimate.

There was indeed and is indeed no dark side that I have been able to see publicly or privately with JACK KEMP. And that is important for people to know in an area where the personal side of politicians is, I think, increasingly subject to a lot of question. We may all get sort of a bad rap on that, but this is a man who, even when engaged in very difficult political combat, always maintained the highest degree of respect and even affection for people with whom he was disagreeing and who genuinely and honestly pursued the marketplace of ideas in political competition as a joy and an opportunity to improve the condition of man.

I think of all the words I have heard spoken here this afternoon there were five that were the most descriptive of what I would say is true about JACK KEMP's involvement in the process, and they came again from our very eloquent friend, HENRY HYDE. He said them without a great deal of emphasis, and I am just going to repeat them. He termed JACK KEMP "a vital force for good." Those are not overpowering words. In fact, they are almost understated. But if we think about it, what could be said that is better about any of us who dedicate ourselves to public life than that we are a vital force for good?

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to have been associated in the past and to be associated in the future with JACK KEMP and to be associated with the good works that I believe he is pursuing.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER] for that very sincere analysis and for his sincere remarks with regard to his feeling about JACK KEMP and what he has contributed to this country and to this Congress.

On behalf of the New York delegation, we are going to miss JACK in the next session of the next Congress. We have been very proud that he has been a member of our delegation, and we wish him and Joanne and the family every good happening as they proceed into many new adventures in this country.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, as the 100th Congress draws to a close, it is with a sense of sadness that one of my dearest friends, JACK KEMP, will be leaving us for a time. I came to Congress with JACK back in January 1970, and since that time I have come to regard him as a great friend and trusted adviser.

JACK KEMP represented the type of youthful energy and vigor 18 years ago that was essential to the cause of good government and a general attitude on the part of the American people that the time for tired, misused political cliches was over.

From day one, JACK KEMP has demonstrated to young people all over America that thoughtful, compassionate conservatism was the right approach for America's future. With boundless enthusiasm, a sensible message, and a zeal for articulating the American dream he has encouraged millions of people from all walks of life to work hard and build a nation that our children and grandchildren can be proud of.

JACK KEMP believes in America. He believes in free enterprise, and he fights for the American taxpayer. In fact, he has few equals when it comes to understanding the Federal Tax Code and how our tax system should be used to encourage development and growth rather than penalize those who invest and save for America's future.

JACK has accomplished so much in such a short lifetime that it would be virtually impossible to list everything. As one of the premier players in the old American Football League he thrilled millions of football fans with his gutsy determination and hard-nosed play. But more important, he took those football skills and added his natural talent to communicate with people to become an inspiration to America's youth. He has always been a symbol of the very best that competitive sports can offer, and if ever a sports figure was "Jack Armstrong, the All-American Boy," it is JACK KEMP.

While I am going to miss the counsel, wisdom, and dedication of JACK here in the House, like my colleagues, I can take solace in the fact that he will continue to be prominently involved in the affairs of the State of New York and the entire Nation.

JACK, we wish you a first down on every snap of the ball, and we are all a lot better off because of your friendship and dedication to the Congress and our great country.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I first met JACK KEMP when he appeared at our annual Spring Grove Area High School Athletic Club banquet. My father, who was then a Member of Congress, arranged for his visit. When he began speaking before this high school group of boy and girl athletes, I was afraid that I would be embarrassed because I assumed these young people would become very restless and do the things they sometimes like to do sitting around the banquet table after dinner has been served. I particularly feared this might happen because he was including some rather serious historical facts and considerations in his speech. He held these high school students spellbound for 45 minutes. After that speech, I wrote him a letter as the superintendent of the Spring Grove Area School District thanking him for giving those teenagers so much to think about and suggesting at that time, and I believe this was back in the very early 1970's, that I would expect to have the opportunity to vote for him as President of the United States. I still believe I will some day have that opportunity.

I next met JACK during my orientation period after being elected to Congress of the United States. He saw me in the Hall of the Capitol and asked me on which committees I would like to serve—I told him that since I thought I had some expertise in education, I would like to serve on the Education and Labor Committee. With a grin, he wished me well and indicated that he was just getting off of that committee.

His leadership in the Congress and in my party has been so important to this institution and the Republican Party and to this great Nation. No one will be surprised who has ever been in JACK KEMP's company at whatever he may achieve in his lifetime and that whatever goals he sets will be accomplished, because he will be dedicated to the task and the results will benefit all Americans and the world in general.

I wish JACK and his family the best in the future.

Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation for the service of Congressman JACK KEMP. JACK has represented his district well for 18 years, and served as chairman of the House Republican Conference throughout almost all of the Reagan administration. During the early days of the administration, JACK played an important role in guiding the Reagan economic program through the House. By doing so, he helped usher in a economic recovery that is now in its 70th month.

JACK always impressed me with his intelligence and enthusiasm. His leadership ability stemmed from his ability to infect you with his enthusiasm and make you want to follow him. He would speak on a grand scope, and would relate issues in respect to the big picture. Yet, he was also appealing on a personal level. He knew that people were individuals, and were all individually important. As conference chairman, he would make it a point to know everyone's name, and make a junior Member feel a part of this body.

I wish JACK all the best at the Heritage Foundation, and I am sure that he will be just as innovative and effective there as he was in the House.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in bidding a fond farewell to our distinguished colleague from New York, JACK KEMP, as he prepares to leave this House and embark on another career.

It has been a pleasure to work with him during the past 14 years on matters of vital import to our State and the western New York region.

Political party and philosophical differences aside, on many issues affecting the quality of life and the future revitalization of the Buffalo area, JACK KEMP was an enthusiastic and energetic ally.

In a sustained, multiyear effort, for example, the western New York delegation worked to obtain Federal funding for the first segment of a light rail rapid transit line that has served—as we expected and projected—as a catalyst, a stimulus to the broader revitalization of the city of Buffalo.

It was an effort that persisted through several administrations in Washington and a series of Secretaries of Transportation and Urban Mass Transportation Administration administrators.

This kind of unified delegation approach also resulted in continuation of magnet school aid so important to the Buffalo public schools' exemplary program, establishment of a federally funded Earthquake Center at the State University of New York at Buffalo, the naming of the nuclear attack submarine, the U.S.S. Buffalo, and sustained funding for the sorely needed Ellicott Creek flood control project, to cite a few other examples.

In recent years, JACK KEMP entered his party's leadership structure in this body and rose to national prominence as a vocal spokesman on economic issues he vigorously espoused.

His tenacious quest for his party's Presidential nomination and his gracious withdrawal from that race were reflections of JACK KEMP at his best.

It has been a pleasure to serve in the Congress with the gentleman from New York during these challenging times for our nation.

Therefore, I congratulate him as he completes 18 years' public service here and wish him continued good health and good fortune.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in paying tribute to a highly respected colleague and very dear friend, Congressman JACK KEMP. As a classmate of JACK's, elected in 1970, I have been fortunate to have worked with him throughout these many years.

JACK has always excelled in everything he put his mind to. Whether representing the people of the 31st District of New York or quarterbacking for the Buffalo Bills, JACK has consistently "wowed 'em" with his personality, commitment, and outstanding leadership. As the ranking Republican on the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, JACK played a key role in carrying out U.S. foreign policy goals working tirelessly to promote human rights and peace worldwide.

JACK is a man of remarkable dedication and conviction. He is committed to the vision that we all share for a better, stronger America and a world of limitless opportunity and growth. JACK has always recognized the importance of the American family as the foundation of democracy and American life. As a member of the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, he has worked for initiatives that strengthen the family and traditional values, including prolife measures and legislation combating child pornography.

JACK has been a brilliant and eloquent spokesman for the conservative values which over the past 8 years have promoted peace and prosperity throughout our Nation. His leadership and expertise on matters relating to defense and national security have helped to revitalize our weapons systems and ensure the protection of the United States. And equally important, JACK'S profamily agenda has ensured the well-being of this and future generations through expanding economic opportunity and furthering the sanctity of human life.

We, in Congress, have much to thank JACK KEMP for, as do all Americans. His legacy of good works and his idealism will remain long after he has gone from these Halls of Congress. I wish JACK, his lovely wife Joanne, and all their children much success and the very best for the future.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, we are about to lose a friend and colleague of almost two decades. New York Congressman JACK KEMP is retiring from the U.S. House of Representatives in January at the end of his ninth term in this Chamber.

He will leave behind a record his successor will find difficult to duplicate.

JACK KEMP will long be remembered as a congressional pioneer. He reached out his hand and led many through the thickets of doubt that originally surrounded the ideas of those who sounded the call for supply side economics. JACK KEMP'S ideas were incorporated into the 1981 tax law which pulled this country into an economic clearing, freeing it from the disastrous entanglements of policies which gripped us with the terrible recession of the administration which preceded that of President Ronald Reagan.

He has been an articulate spokesman for reduced Government interference in the lives of the citizens of this Republic.

JACK'S career has seen him star on the football field as well as on the floor of this House and in its committee meeting rooms. Just as he completed collegiate and professional football passes in a career few men will ever equal, so, too, has he completed his drives for better legislation in a congressional career which so many envy.

It is unfortunate for the Members of this Chamber that JACK has decided to wrap up his congressional career at this time. Ever since his first election in 1970, his upstate New York constituents have sent up loud and clear messages that they wanted JACK KEMP to continue to serve them in the House of Representatives. He will be missed for his leadership in so many areas. He will also be missed as a friend. May the years ahead hold only happiness for JACK, his lovely wife, Joanne, and their four children.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives will not be the same with the close of this session and this Congress. Following 18 years of diligent service in the House, our friend and distinguished colleague JACK KEMP will retire. I can't picture this House without JACK's enthusiasm and nonstop pursuit of the issues we consider daily.

He has been one of the most effective legislators I've ever seen in the area of economic recovery and reform. His hard work on behalf of the economic revival this Nation has experienced over the last 8 years has benefitted every working American, and those seeking new opportunities in the workplace, the marketplace, or in education.

JACK, upon your retirement I want you to know that we wish you only the very best in the future. You will be missed, but your excellent example will remain as a reminder of expertise in legislation and leadership.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join with my colleagues in the House of Representatives in paying tribute to the Honorable JACK KEMP, who is leaving the Congress after 18 years of dedicated service.

First elected to the 92d Congress in 1970, JACK KEMP has proven himself to be a most capable legislator, worthy of the trust, and confidence of his constituents from the 31st Congressional District of New York, whom he has ably represented for nine terms. He has served the House of Representatives with distinction as a member of the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs of the House Appropriations Committee, and as a member of the House Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families. He also has compiled an exemplary record of creative accomplishment in several leadership positions in his party.

JACK KEMP is a man devoted to the people of his district, his State, and his country. He is a fine legislator, and a Congressman of great ability, compassion, and courage, who truly will be missed by all of us in Congress who had an opportunity to know him and to work with him.

I extend to JACK KEMP my best wishes for continued success in all his future endeavors.

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Speaker, we all know JACK KEMP as the 1960's quarterback for the San Diego Chargers who has since refined his sence of leadership to become a driving force in the huddles of Congress.

I would like to recount briefly the path he took to get from the locker room to the Cloakroom.

He was born in Los Angeles, so we accept him as a southern Californian; and we forgive him his shuffle off to Buffalo, NY.

A graduate of Occidental College, he led the Nation's small-college teams in passing his senior year, but in the 1956 prodraft he was a low-round selection. However, success was at hand when in 1960 he got a break with my team, the San Diego Chargers.

There were ups as well as downs for the football player. He was a quarterback for the team until a hand injury sidelined him. The Chargers meant to put him on the injured list but goofed and placed him on waivers. The Buffalo Bills picked him up for the princely sum of $100.

Now we think he is worth somewhat more than that and the Bills must have thought so too when he quarterbacked the team to four divisional and two league championships. In 1965, he was the AFL's most valuable player.

But there was something different about this football player—he seemed to think he should have something to do in the off-season. In San Diego he went to work for the San Diego Union as a youth-page columnist—than graduated to editorials and political writing. He was part of the Union's team covering the 1964 Republican National Convention.

While he was with the Bills, fans urged him to run for Congress and that effort was the first of many touchdowns in a distinguished career in the House of Representatives.

JACK KEMP rallied the Congress to tax reform back in 1980 and succeeded in lowering taxes under the Kemp-Roth bill in 1981. He has served his country well as a member of the Appropriations Committee.

I consider JACK a close friend and honored colleague, and if the House had such an award, we would have named him MVP. As he leaves the Congress we wish him well and Godspeed and know we will hear much more of this public servant in the years to come.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity to join my colleagues in paying tribute to our good friend and loyal colleague JACK KEMP, as he prepares to retire from the House after 18 years of distinguished and dedicated service.

When I was first elected to the House of Representatives 10 years ago, JACK's name was already on its way to becoming a household word—no mean feat for a member of the minority party. In preparing these remarks, I reread a piece JACK authored during our bicentennial year, 1976. Not astonishingly, it is just as true today as it was at the time:

> A tax on productivity is a tax on capital that biases people away from savings and towards consumption. Obviously, that means less capital, therefore lower productivity, fewer new jobs, and a lower rate of growth in real wages. Fewer new jobs mean more unemployment.

JACK's economic acumen impressed me even before I had the privilege to serve with him.

JACK may be a New Yorker today, but he was educated in my own State of California, which gives us an association in common. He is a strong family man, a sound conservative, and an articulate and convincing spokeman for the causes he espouses. He will be missed in the House. He has represented his district, his State, and the Nation with responsible leadership and true commitment. I wish him well in whatever he undertakes, and I have been proud to serve with him.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute and bid a fond farewell to my friend and colleague JACK KEMP. I think it is fair to say this place will not be the same. In losing JACK we lose an eloquent spokesman for populist conservatism.

Whether you agreed with him or not you could not help but admire the tenacity and fervency with which he pursued his causes. JACK may have left the football field, but he has yet to lose the competitive spirit and enthusiasm of the professional athlete. It is that spirit and enthusiasm that will be missed most.

But unlike most of my colleagues if I get to missing JACK too much I can always visit the Football Hall of Fame in my district in Canton, OH, where JACK's jersey hangs, and feel as if a part of him is nearby.

It is rare that one so young can boast two successful careers. JACK has distinguished himself both on the football field and in Congress and in both endeavors has served his team, whether it be the Buffalo Bills or the GOP, as an able leader.

I can think of few Members who have as significant a legislative record as JACK KEMP and none who have done so as a member of the minority party. JACK was instrumental in enacting the budget and tax packages in 1981. He has been an eloquent advocate of administration foreign and defense policies through his position as the ranking Republican on the Appropriations Committee's Foreign Operations Subcommittee.

As JACK leaves this body I have a sense that it is not an ending, but rather a new beginning. On whatever field JACK chooses to play next, I am sure he will distinguish himself and I am sure the country has not heard the last of JACK KEMP.

On a personal note, Mary and I will always cherish the friendship of JACK and Joanne. We have appreciated the many times they have answered the call of their fans in the 16th District to share in both party events as well as Football Hall of Fame activities.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in paying tribute to my fellow New Yorker and fellow Appropriations Committee colleague who is retiring from the Congress, JACK KEMP.

I salute JACK for his diligent efforts to ensure stability in the Middle East through his work on the Appropriations Committee, where, until he began his quest for the Republican Presidential nomination, he served as the ranking Republican on the Foreign Operations Subcommittee. His recognition of the importance of the security of Israel as America's strongest ally in the Middle East has been a critical element in the work of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee.

I wish JACK well in his new career and I know we shall continue to hear from him on the important issues of the day.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to participate in this tribute to our good friend and esteemed colleague, the Honorable JACK KEMP on the occasion of his retirement from the U.S. House of Representatives.

By all acounts, Congressman JACK KEMP is a very talented and deeply dedicated public servant who has labored untiringly for the causes he cherishes. Representative KEMP has consistently shown that he is a skilled statesman and an articulate spokesman who is devoted to the human cause. His earnest understanding and practical judgment of the issues earned him a distinguished role in national leadership.

Congressman KEMP has been an idefatigable spokesman for his constituents and a dutiful representative of his district, State and Nation. The people of New York's 31st District have been well served by Congressman JACK KEMP. His contributions to our Nation will benefit generations to come.

JACK KEMP is a fine friend and a distinguished leader. We will miss him in the next Congress. Best wishes for health and happiness in the future.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in paying tribute to an outstanding legislator and leader who is departing Capitol Hill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP].

When JACK KEMP first came to Congress in 1970, some people had reservations about the prospect of a former football star serving the Nation as a legislator. JACK KEMP soon proved them all wrong. It was quickly demonstrated for all that his keen intellect and his vigorous concern for the future of our Nation were just as intense as JACK's performance on the gridiron.

JACK KEMP was born in 1935 in Los Angeles, CA. A graduate of Occidental College, of Long Beach State University, and of California Western, JACK majored in physical education, but his first love was economics. After his fabulously successful football career ended, he intensified his study of that complex field.

Many of us do not remember the fact that JACK KEMP was elected from a congressional district that was traditionally Democratic. Such is the force of his personality and his sterling reputation that he became virtually unbeatable in his home region, despite the fact the district had a long tradition of liberal Democratic representation.

It is indicative that JACK KEMP, like Ronald Reagan, has a background as president of a labor union, the American Football League Players Association. It is ironic that JACK KEMP and Ronald Reagan were both union leaders.

This experience with the AFL Players Association left JACK with an indelible appreciation for the rights of the working man. The blue collar workers of his 31st District have long rallied to JACK KEMP's support.

The years of immersing himself in economic theory paid off with the Kemp-Roth tax proposal; a plan that will long be studied by students of American history as a true turning point in our path to progress.

JACK will also be remembered for his championing the Urban Enterprize Zone proposal. Although this farsighted proposal enjoyed bipartisan support it did not progress in the House. While we did not adopt Urban Enterpirse Zone, the idea has been taken up by many States and cities, with the great success that JACK KEMP predicted.

Although JACK gained a nationwide reputation—indeed, a worldwide reputation—as a spokesperson for conservative causes, JACK always "marched to a different drummer." He was never afraid to vote his conscience on any issue, no matter how much it might surprise his colleagues or his constituents. Accordingly, he voted against Gramm-Rudman, and he opposed the constitutional amendment to balance the budget, because he did not feel these proposals were sound. Jack also was a long-time leader in fighting for Human Rights wherever there was oppression or bigotry. He was particularly a staunch advocate on behalf of Soviet Jewry.

JACK felt, as many of us feel, that we in Congress should not abdicate our responsibility to thoroughly review and balance our budget.

We are going to miss JACK KEMP greatly, but these Halls will echo with his challenges and his intellect for decades to come.

Ever since first coming to Congress in 1972, I have been proud to consider JACK KEMP a friend. I am hopeful that his retirement—if that seems an appropriate word, for people like JACK never retire—brings good health and years of happiness to JACK and Joanne. I am confident all of our colleagues join in extending best wishes to JACK KEMP upon his departure and our best wishes for success in all of his future endeavors.

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, the indomitable spirit of JACK KEMP has left indelible marks upon this House of Representatives, this house of the people of the United States.

No leader of this Congress has done more for the sustained economic growth of America than our colleague and my personal friend, JACK KEMP.

What JACK envisioned when he proposed and fought for tax rate reductions became the battle cry of the Republican Party and later, the policy of the administration of President Ronald Reagan.

The legislative game plan conceived and nurtured by JACK KEMP in the 1970's have been key factors in the addition of 18 million additional jobs in America.

For 72 consecutive months, Americans have enjoyed an economic expansion in peacetime.

The doom and gloom crowd said it couldn't be done.

JACK KEMP said prosperity is boundless.

JACK has been proven right. The doom and gloom crowd, the defeatists, have been proven wrong.

Throughout his life, JACK KEMP has been a winner, not because he has been lucky but because he has fought and disciplined himself to be a leader.

Because JACK has been a winner, all Americans have been winners.

Mr. Speaker, we join individually and collectively to express our appreciation for his past services and wish him well and God speed as he moves on to new challenges.

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to my colleague, JACK KEMP of New York, on the occasion of his impending retirement. He will be sorely missed by those in Congress who have had the opportunity of knowing, and working with, this accomplished statesman.

Congressman JACK KEMP's election to Congress in 1970, followed a successful 13-year career as a quarterback in the American and National Football Leagues. Throughout his 18-year career in the House of Representatives, Congressman KEMP has demonstrated a commitment to leadership and excellence, and a vision of a future for America and the world, of limitless opportunity and growth.

JACK has served on the House Appropriations, Budget, and Education and Labor Committees, and on the Select Committees on Small Business and Children, Youth and Family. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, JACK served as ranking Republican on the Foreign Operations Subcommittee and, in this capacity, he played a key role in carrying out significant U.S. foreign policy objectives.

JACK also served for 7 years as chairman of the House Republican Conference and as a senior counselor to the President's National Bipartisan Commission on Central America—the Kissinger Commission.

Throughout his congressional career, JACK has demonstrated a profound commitment to the American family. He has worked for initiatives that strengthen the family and traditional values, including an end to abortion, measures to combat child pornography, and initiatives to provide tuition tax credits and to strengthen magnet schools.

With his wife Joanne, JACK has carried out his commitment to worldwide human rights through the founding of CREED, the Christian Rescue Effort for the Emancipation of Dissidents. As a Commissioner on the Helsinki Commission on Human Rights, he has fought for the rights of Soviet Jewry and political dissidents.

JACK is the author of the Kemp-Roth 30-percent across-the-board tax cut, which was adopted by President Reagan during his 1980 Presidential campaign and became the cornerstone of President Reagan's economic recovery plan when it was enacted by Congress and signed into law in 1981.

All in Congress have benefited from JACK's congressional career, and all will deeply miss the leadership and wisdom he has displayed over the last 18 years. I would like to join my colleagues in wishing JACK farewell, also wishing him happiness and success in his future endeavors.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, JACK KEMP was one of the key leaders in the American Renaissance of the 1980's. His vision for a new era of prosperity and security has come of age, and as JACK goes forward from this Chamber, his leadership will also guide American policy through the years to come.

Although JACK is best known for his efforts in providing Americans with economic security, he also deserves praise for his contributions to our national security. He has been a compelling force in the formulation of our national defense policy, and has been one of the leading advocates for a strong national defense.

He has been a leading proponent of the "Peace Though Strength" philosophy, which recognizes the positive international implications associated with the rebuilding of our Nation's military might.

During the eighties, JACK has been a key player in shaping the debate on defense matters based on the "Peace Through Strength" philosophy, especially as a leading proponent for the strategic defense initiative. With supporters like JACK, we were able to revitalize our military force and advance the SDI Program—a successful combination that ultimately brought the Soviets back to the arms control bargaining table.

Even before the Reagan administration, JACK was at the forefront in defining the proper relationship between foreign policy and defense initiatives, as he stated in his book, "The American Renaissance":

> Perhaps the most damaging aspect of our entire national security apparatus is the manner in which arms control policy has become a substitute for defense policy. I strongly believe that arms control can contribute to national security, but it can never do so if our policy perceives arms control to be an alternative to investment in defense.

Although his influence reaches into many areas, perhaps it is best to sum up the contributions of JACK KEMP by simply acknowledging that he was a key leader in the renaissance of America.

I expect JACK KEMP will continue to lead America into the next century.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, our good friend, former member of the Republican leadership and Presidential candidate, JACK KEMP, will be leaving the House at the close of the 100th Congress. I want to join so many of our colleagues in paying tribute to JACK. Ever since he came to the House in 1971, he has been at the very heart of the movement that eventually became known as the Reagan revolution.

We in the House are usually concerned with the nuts-and-bolts, day-by-day realities of legislative machinery—getting legislation passed, making certain we guide bills through the maze of parliamentary procedure. When we are not involved in that exacting task, we are concerned about reelection because, after all, we are up for election every 2 years. Put all of this together with our duties to our constituents and mending fences back home and it is a hectic schedule with little room for contemplation.

This is what makes JACK KEMP'S congressional career so astounding. Aside from taking care of the normal duties of a Congressman, JACK brought before us something that gets almost no attention in our deliberations—ideas. JACK knows the power of ideas and before the Reagan revolution ever took place, JACK was preaching the virtues of lower taxes and allowing Americans to freely make the economic decisions important to them.

I believe that his unceasing work on behalf of that kind of economic common sense was one of the true revolutionary ideas to influence the House and the Nation since the end of World War II. As we concentrated on how the machine of economic policy works, we were asked by JACK an even more important question: What is the purpose of all this economic policy machinery? Once that became the question, the very nature of economic policy debate was changed.

JACK'S leadership in the field of national security, foreign policy, arms control, aid to the freedom fighters of Nicaragua and Angola are among his major achievements. But I believe history will record that it was his willingness to confront his colleagues with the power of ideas that will remain his greatest legacy.

We Republicans benefited from having JACK in the leadership as chairman of the Republican Conference. His 1988 race for the Presidency showed once more his thoughtful and considered analysis of many complex issues.

JACK'S political career demonstrates that the power of ideas in politics still remains the driving force of political change. In the years ahead, I know we will continue to benefit from his energy, his vision, and his friendship.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my words of tribute to JACK KEMP, a friend and colleague whom I know we will see much more of in the future. I will not repeat JACK's many accomplishments in his 18 years of service in Congress, my colleagues have adequately done that.

In tribute to JACK I must speak of the future, not the past. JACK KEMP will be a leader of this Nation, whether as President or in some other capacity. He is destined for ever greater leadership than he has shown in Congress because he is truly a man of vision.

I know of no one in politics who has a vision of the world in as many areas as JACK KEMP. From neighborhoods, to tax policy, to geopolitics, to struggles for freedom, JACK KEMP is at the forefront of the war of ideas. In all these areas his guiding principle is freedom, individual freedom—in the marketplace and democratic government, at home and abroad.

I wish him the best of luck in all his endeavors and look forward to working with him and his family for many years to come.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to take part in this special order honoring Congressman JACK KEMP of New York for his fine career in Congress. Although still a young man, JACK is leaving after 18 eventful years in the House. I have been proud to know him here in Congress and to work with him on the Appropriations Committee.

Like many of us, I first noticed JACK KEMP when he was a quarterback in the American Football League. He was a tough competitor who never quit and often found spectacular ways to win the game. He brought those qualities with him when he entered Congress. JACK has shown great leadership qualities here in Congress and he ran a fine Presidential campaign earlier this year. Although we don't always agree on policy, I have found it very easy to work with JACK. He is a good listener, a good negotiator and a good legislator. The people of Buffalo have been blessed to have him here in Congress. He has been a true innovator, often provoking interesting debate on a wide range of issues. Congress is richer for the infusion of ideas from JACK KEMP.

Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to call JACK KEMP friend. I am sure he has a great future in the Republican Party and in Government. We will be hearing a lot more about JACK KEMP after he leaves here. JACK, I wish you and your wife Joanne the best in the years ahead. I won't urge you to relax, because I know you will be out working hard for your beliefs after you leave Congress.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to my esteemed colleague from New York, JACK KEMP. As you know, JACK will be retiring from the House of Representatives at the end of the 100th Congress.

It has truly been a pleasure to work with JACK over the last 18 years. He has continually shown an undaunted enthusiasm and ability for taking the lead on important issues and his presence in this body will be missed.

While JACK gained national attention for his leadership qualities, he has always made his constituents his No. 1 priority. I know that the citizens of the 31st District of New York will miss the compassion and commitment that JACK displayed while representing them in Congress.

It has been my privilege to know and work with JACK KEMP. He has served his constituents and his country with honor and dedication, and I wish him and his family continued success and happiness in the future.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to pay tribute to one of the most dynamic and productive leaders in Congress over the past 18 years, my distinguished friend and colleague from New York, the Honorable JACK KEMP.

JACK, was first elected to Congress in 1970, following a highly successful 13-year career as a quarterback for the San Diego Chargers and the Buffalo Bills. Parenthetically, I might say that he was truly a childhood hero of mine. When I was in eighth grade, I saw JACK play a scrambling quarterback for the then Los Angeles Chargers in the L.A. Colisium. On the football field, JACK led the Buffalo Bills to league championships in 1964 and 1965. Twice he was selected as "All-League Quarterback," once with the San Diego Chargers in 1960, and again in 1965 with the Buffalo Bills. He was cofounder of the AFL Players Association and president of the association for 5 years, helping negotiate one of the most important pension contracts in professional football. In 1965, JACK was selected as the "Most Valuable Player in the League," and in 1983, he received the National Football Foundation and Hall of Fame's Gold Medal for excellence in leadership on both the football field and the congressional field.

JACK's success at both football and public service has been no coincidence. He began working in politics while he was playing in the AFL. He was a volunteer in both the Nixon and Goldwater Presidential campaigns and in Ronald Reagan's Gubernatorial campaign of 1966. By the late 1960's, he was working in the off-season as an assistant to Gov. Ronald Reagan's chief of staff.

JACK KEMP lives and works at level of intensity that most other men can admire but never hope to match. JACK promotes his political and economic ideals with an enthusiasm and drive that suggests he never quite left professional football. JACK loves his country and the American traditions of individual liberty and free-enterprise with a boundless passion. He exudes an energy and can-do optimism about free-enterprise and pushed forward the most dramatic reductions in federal taxation our Nation has ever had.

JACK KEMP's economic ideals and goals for the Nation came in part from reflections on the America he knew growing up in Los Angeles and the one he represented in Buffalo. JACK grew up in an area with strong economic growth and limited Government intrusiveness. He represented an area that was suffering limited economic growth and was heavily burdened with excessive taxation. He came to believe that Government was overtaxing productive people. A voracious reader, JACK knew that the 19th century British Prime Minister William Gladstone often employed the metaphor that placing high taxes on productive people was like killing the goose that laid the golden egg. Gladstone's tax cuts played an important part in the great economic growth of the British Empire during the 19th century.

JACK popularized the Nation as well as the term "supply-side economics." Without a doubt he is one of America's most forceful and persuasive politicians when he presents his vision of vibrant economic growth and how it can improve the lives of ordinary people. In 1978, JACK introduced the Kemp-Roth tax proposal to make across-the-board tax-cuts of 30 percent over a period of 3 years. JACK'S strength in galvanizing support both inside and outside of Congress for this then radical proposal for economic change was the driving force behind the Reagan revolution and the 1981 tax cuts.

The Kemp-Roth proposal would become the cornerstone of the Reagan economic recovery plan enacted by Congress and signed into law in 1981. The first year of Ronald Reagan's Presidency was a wonderful triumph for JACK. He was very clearly the single most important congressional force in the passage of the landmark budget and tax-cut legislation of the Reagan administration. When Congress passed the bill cutting taxes by 25 percent over the 3 years, JACK could truly claim a unique personal triumph. No one had ever before gotten through a bill like that who was not on the Ways and Means Committee. The result of this bold economic reform has been the Nation's longest peacetime economic expansion. Almost 6 years of uninterrupted economic growth with the creation of 17 million new jobs has buried inflation, reduced employment and brought prosperity and opportunity to our country.

JACK has led the way to further tax rate reductions in order to encourage investment, job creation, and economic security for all Americans by authoring the Kemp-Kasten "fair and simple tax" plan in 1984. This plan which dramatically lowered tax rates on working families removed the tax burden from the poor, doubled the personal exemption to $2,000 for each family member, and created incentives for investment and economic growth. The Kemp-Kasten plan became the basis of the Tax Reform Act of 1986. In large part due to the untiring efforts of JACK KEMP, tax rates have dropped from 70 percent to 28 percent, giving individuals more of their hard earned dollars to keep in their pockets.

JACK has led the way in allowing supply-side economics and free-enterprise to work in solving some of our country's most pressing social problems. JACK has introduced enterprise zone legislation, designed to encourage investment and job creation in inner cities and poor rural areas by providing tax inventives for entrepreneurs and small business owners to create jobs in the enterprise zones. Although never enacted, it won a symbolic House vote in 1986 and has twice been approved by the Senate. Enterprise zone legislation has been adopted by 37 States.

JACK believes that the poor have a right to buy their own homes. In 1987, JACKS'S proposals to allow residents of public housing to manage their own buildings and to realize the dream of homeownership by buying their units at a discount were included in the housing authorization bill of that year. To further bring the benefits of the market to the poor and minorities, Jack has proposed ensuring that they have the basic skills needed to freely compete in the market by making community-based organizations eligible for vocational education grants.

Together with Jack's many lasting accomplishments in the area of economic reform stands his strong commitment to national security and a strong defense. Jack chaired the committee that drafted the Republican defense platform at the 1980 National Convention, which set the course of recovery of our military strength. Since the beginning of the Reagan Presidency, Jack has been a staunch supporter of democratic resistance movements around the globe, where people are fighting to gain the rights most Americans take for granted. To Jack, the safety of our own freedom is tied in part to meeting the challenge posed by the Soviet Union and its allies to all the people of the free world.

Jack has been a leader in the effort to gain military and humanitarian assistance to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters, introducing the bipartisan Nicaraguan Freedom Act of 1980 which provides for over $57 million in aid to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance. He has been a consistent supporter of United States assistance to the democratic resistance groups in such countries as Angola, Mozambique, and Afghanistan.

Jack Kemp led the way in the development and deployment of the strategic defense initiative [SDI], by offering legislation which would require actions to gain early deployment of the system. He has always been a supporter of weapons modernization programs which would be essential to maintain strong credible nuclear and conventional military forces. Part of Jack's policy of maintaining a strong defense is his belief that America and her allies should not be financing new Soviet weapons development through unchecked and unsecured loans to the Soviets and their allies. He has introduced legislation that would require United States banks to disclose the conditions of loans made to the Soviets as well as the number of such loans made by the bank.

Jack Kemp was one of the leading candidates for the Presidential nomination of the Republican Party this year. For that reason, he decided to leave the House after 18 years of service. His bid for the White House was ultimately unsuccessful, but I expect to see a lot of Jack Kemp on the national political scene. This man who has given us all so much has still a lot more to give. America is enjoying the fruits of Jack Kemp's leadership in Congress. From Jack's future endeavors I am confident the Nation will benefit more still.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join his many friends in the House in honoring one of our own, a good friend and colleague, Jack Kemp, who is retiring from the House after 18 years of service to the people of New York's 31st Congressional District.

Jack and I came to the House together back in 1971. Though classmates here in the House, our backgrounds are very different. We hail from different regions of the country. We are members of different parties. And, often we are on opposite sides on policy issues.

Nonetheless, I consider Jack a good friend, and I think everyone who comes to know Jack feels the same way. He is an honest, intelligent, hard-working, straightforward kind of guy.

It is no surprise that success would follow Jack here in the House, since that is what characterized his earlier career as a professional football player. In a sense, perhaps, the challenges facing a quarterback are similar to those which come before legislators. To prevail, one must possess energy, intelligence, leadership, and determination. Jack Kemp has all these qualities in abundance.

Throughout his tenure in the House, Jack has been an ardent spokesman for economic and tax reforms. He has raised the level of debate and contributed significantly to the eventual outcome on legislation and policy decisions. Though he leaves the House, I know Jack will continue to work hard and speak out forcefully on those important issues while serving as a distinguished fellow at the Heritage Foundation.

A devoted family man, husband and father, maybe now Jack will be able to share more quality time with his very talented family. I wish Jack much health and happiness in the years ahead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Gonzalez). Is a second demanded?

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. Waxman] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madigan] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. Waxman].

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present to the House a very important bill. The legislation provides for the reauthorization of a number of vital public health programs and establishes new programs to help in the fight against AIDS.

I want to note that the provisions contained in S. 2889 have in general already been approved by the House. They have been packaged as part of an omnibus bill at the request of the Senate and are intended to facilitate Senate passage. Mr. Speaker, I would have preferred that the bills be considered individually as originally passed by the House but our Senate counterparts have urged us to pursue this alternative legislative route.

At this time allow me to briefly summarize the major provisions of this legislation.

Title I provides for a 2-year extension of expiring authorities of the National Institute of Health. In addition, title I extends for 2 years to current moratorium on fetal research and provides for a study of this issue by the Congressional Ethics Board.

Title II provides for establishment of new AIDS research and training programs and establishes a State block grant program to provide home health services for AIDS patients. It also provides for AIDS education programs particularly those for currently underserved populations such as minority groups, and intravenous drug abusers.

Title III provides for extension of expiring prevention programs including the Preventive Health Services Block Grant, health promotion and disease prevention programs, and programs to control and prevent sexually transmitted diseases.

Title IV provides for, extends, and improves the National Organ Transplant Act by providing for establishment of a National Bone Marrow Registry and a State program of assistance for immunosuppressive drugs.

Title V provides for Presidential appointment and Senate confirmation of the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration. These provisions are similar to those contained in H.R. 1226 which passed the House last month.

Title VI provides for extension of health manpower programs authorized by the Public Health Service Act. The legislation is similar to H.R. 4983 which passed the House earlier this month.

Title VII provides initiatives to reduce the nursing shortage and extends for 3 fiscal years nurse education programs authorized by the Public Health Service Act. The legislation is similar to H.R. 4833 which passed the House last month.

Title XIII extends for 3 fiscal years the authorization of appropriations for primary care, substance abuse and mental health programs for the homeless. These provisions are similar to provisions that passed the House earlier this year.

Title IX is a program for prison testing for AIDS.

Mr. Speaker, that is a brief description of the various parts of this omnibus health bill. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to use part of my time for a colloquy with the gentleman from California [Mr. Waxman]. I feel that both he and I are having a procedure visited upon us that is not particularly to either of our liking, but it is apparently necessary if some of these existing programs are going to be properly reauthorized.

So, I would ask the gentleman from California [Mr. Waxman] if I can take a look at this bill in total. There are several parts of this bill that were freestanding bills that previously passed the House by a voice vote.

Is that correct?

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADIGAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think that every single title in this legislation represents a single bill that passed the House in some different form, but by and large it is very similar to what is before us today.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, the differences are, as I understand it, two in number, one being the inclusion of home health care provisions for AIDS patients sponsored by the gentleman from Utah in the other body, our distinguished colleague, Senator Hatch, and I wonder, because that has not passed the House, if the gentleman from California [Mr. Waxman] could briefly describe that program.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield to me further?

Mr. MADIGAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, Senator Hatch has proposed a block grant of funds that would be available to the States to provide home health services in order to avoid institutionalization in the hospital or nursing home for patients suffering from AIDS. The program is geared to those who cannot otherwise afford to pay for their own care, a priority especially to those who are indigent, and it is a time-limited program because we hope to learn from this services block grant how well home health services are going to be working to avoid the institutionalization and to meet the needs of AIDS patients.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that we have not addressed the issue of how we are going to provide services to those people who have AIDS. It is a serious problem that we are going to have to come to terms with.

The House of Representatives adopted at the end of the fiscal year, the last day of the fiscal year, an extension for 6 months of the appropriations, authorization for appropriations, of the drug AZT, which is the only drug now that allows the AIDS patients to survive for a longer period of time. It is a very much needed drug. It keeps them alive. It is not a cure, but it keeps patients alive, but for those who have already started using AZT, to be taken off would be certain death.

Mr. Speaker, we have on a compassionate basis, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] well knows, adopted the extension of that authorization for 6 months. In 6 months that Federal program will be ended. We will have this block grant for a 2-year period, and we will monitor it and see what we can learn about it. But by and large the care for AIDS patients is going to fall on the Medicaid Program. It is the health care program for not just the poor, but for the very poor in our society.

Mr. Speaker, to be eligible for Medicaid, AIDS patients, as well as all other sufferers of illnesses, will have to become eligible after they have exhausted their resources paying for their own health care services to the point where they have no further funds left.

Mr. Speaker, I am giving a very long answer to this, and I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] for tolerating such an extensive description of the services problem.

This block grant is a temporary measure, as I see it, for dealing with an immediate problem for AIDS patients by using the States to have these funds for this 2-year period, and we will come back and review it, and the next Congress will have to deal with that issue.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] for that explanation.

The other main difference in the bill before us today relates to the AIDS legislation which passed the House, as I recall, by an overwhelming vote. In the bill now before us, the House passed provisions have been modified. But that has been scaled back considerably in the other body as a result of an agreement between the gentleman from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY; the gentleman from North Carolina, Senator HELMS, and the gentleman from Utah, Senator HATCH.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] would be willing to describe what we now have before us in terms of that scaled-back bill.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADIGAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] for yielding to me on that point.

I must express my own personal disappointment that the Congress did not adopt the legislation that was passed by the House by such an overwhelming measure that would have provided funding for testing, and counseling and protections for the confidentiality of those people who either have a positive or a negative test. It would not make any difference, protections of the confidentiality of that information. We worked extensively on that matter, and we decided that it was important to protect confidentiality of especially those that had a positive test because of the clear discrimination that may likely follow that individual should others know, the public and others know, that they have the antibody for AIDS.

Mr. Speaker, we thought, just as we do for any other medical procedure, that it is no one else's business what a person's health status is except we also concluded it does become someone else's business if they are at risk of being exposed to this deadly virus. So, in our legislation we provided for protections of confidentiality with exceptions for spouses and other sexual partners, for public health people within the State, for health care workers. We provided for morticians, who are sometimes exposed to bodily fluids, and under the guidelines of the Centers for Disease Control we would give them that information about the antibody status of a deceased individual brought to a mortuary.

Mr. Speaker, we looked at these points, and, as they were raised, we addressed them, and, where it was ligitimate for confidentiality to be breached, we provided that confidentiality appropriately to be breached. But except for those circumstances we did not think in the House that it was wise to allow confidentiality to be thrown out or it would be varied from State to State depending on what the State laws were at any particular point because the essential point that was at stake was that we wanted to encourage people to come in to be tested and counseled.

Mr. Speaker, the reality is that we do not have a cure for AIDS. We can use education, and we are making strides in trying to educate people about how AIDS is spread and how it is not spread, but for those who are high risk expecially to have the virus and be a carrier and transmitter of this virus to others, we would hope they would come in to be tested and that they would be counseled because only through changing their behavior to avoid transmitting the disease to others do we have a chance to contain the pool of people who are infected by this virus. All we can do is contain that pool of people because we have no cure, we have no immunization to prevent other people being exposed.

The unfortunate fact is that the full focus has been prevented from even considering the need for confidentiality. We could not even get it considered because of the bizarre rules of the U.S. Senate that allow one, two, or a few individual Members to keep the Congress of the United States from even considering and deciding that issue. I think that this is a shortsighted mistake.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to come back next year, and we are going to consider the confidentiality, and we are going to consider provisions on nondiscrimination.

By the way, those are recommendations of Surgeon General Koop, the Centers for Disease Control, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and, when President Reagan was not sure enough about their recommendations, he appointed a commission to look at it, at the whole question of confidentiality, and testing and nondiscrimination, and the President's own commission recommended that for a testing and counseling program to succeed we had to assure confidentiality to the extent it makes sense, and we had to assure against discrimination.

We were unable in the House to pass a nondiscrimination bill. Many people thought it should be part of a larger bill that would protect against discrimination in other areas, and we dropped that in the House bill.

But I regret deeply that we are not considering this confidentiality within the context of testing and counseling as passed by the House overwhelmingly, and we will pursue that next year, and I feel confident the House will renwew its legislative request for those provisions.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN].

□ 1645

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman briefly describe the testing provisions in the bill? I understand that these have been scaled back to a $100 million program. Can the gentleman describe this program?

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, yes, that is a program for 2 years. Again, it is a short-term way of dealing with some testing by saying to those States that choose to, and they need not choose to if they want to, but if they choose to have anonymous testing which will allow some people who will not otherwise come forward because of the lack of confidentiality protections, it will allow them to come in to be tested anonymously. Of course, they will be counseled and urged to change their behavior and all of that, appropriately so. So that is a 2-year authorization and during these next 2 years we expect to revisit the whole issue of confidentiality and nondiscrimination and adopt the legislation in that area.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for that explanation.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill. This legislation includes a number of bills that have already passed the House. In addition, the bill includes the agreement on AIDS legislation that has been worked out with the Senate.

Title I extends authorities for the National Institutes of Health. This title also extends for a 2-year period the moratorium on fetal research at the National Institutes of Health.

Title II reflects the agreement the House reached with the Senate on AIDS legislation. The main features of this agreement provide authorities for AIDS research similar to many of the provisions in the House passed bill.

In addition, these provisions include similar provisions in the House-passed bill establishing a National Commission on AIDS. These provisions also include a variety of public information provisions on AIDS that will be largely administered by the States. Finally, while the House passed confidentiality provisions were deleted from the final agreement, the bill does include a 2-year grant program to the States for AIDS testing and counseling. This program will be authorized at $100 million a year.

Title III includes provisions of the conference report on S. 1579, legislation to revise and extend the preventive health services State block grant and the grant program for sexually transmitted diseases.

Title IV includes the identical text of a bill, the Organ Transplant Amendments Act of 1988, that passed the House yesterday.

Title V requires that the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. This is very similar to legislation that passed the House earlier this year.

Title VI addresses the health manpower programs currently authorized under the Public Health Service Act. This bill would extend these authorities with several new initiatives designed to address the shortage of various health professionals in rural areas.

Title VII contains the identical text of a bill, the Nursing Shortage Reduction and Education and Extension Act of 1988 that recently passed the House on nursing training and education programs.

Title VIII includes those provisions addressing health care programs for the homeless that have been agreed to as part of the conference report on the Omnibus McKinney Homeless Assistance Act of 1988.

As I have said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, the procedure to bring this bill before us is not to my liking and also not to the liking of the gentleman from California, the chairman of the Health Subcommittee. However, our counterparts in the other body have indicated that if we want these programs reauthorized and extended, this is the only avenue available to us at this point.

We have been in conference with Members of the other body for some 9 days on this process. I am confident that what we have before us is the bill we have described to the House Chamber. It has been reviewed by the staff on both the majority and the minority sides.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill. However, I must still express my reservations about the process that is being forced upon us.

I would certainly hope that we do not have to repeat this process in the future.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, before I yield back the balance of my time, I want to thank everyone involved in this legislation, especially the staffs, both on the majority side and the minority side.

I want to thank my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, for his cooperation. At the end of a Congress, the demands and meetings are frequent and trying, and I want to thank the gentleman for his patience and cooperation.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, this omnibus bill contains a number of important pieces of health legislation that will affect the lives of all Americans. These reauthorized and expanded research and health delivery programs will benefit biomedical scientists, those in need of organ transplants, the animal drug industry, the homeless, and people with AIDS.

But there is an important element missing from this package. Despite the best efforts of House Members—with particular credit due to my colleagues Chairman HENRY WAXMAN and Congressman ED MADIGAN—the Senate has not been able to accept the House provisions relating to AIDS testing and counseling. This is a serious lapse of judgement on the part of the other body, and one which does not well serve America, and especially people at risk for AIDS.

Nevertheless, I am proud of the role that the Committee on Energy and Commerce has played in developing this important package of health care legislation, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and pleasure that I rise in support of the omnibus health bill. This important health care bill contains a provision which is of great importance to me. Included in this package is legislation I had the privilege to author, H.R. 393, which would establish a National Center on Biotechnology Information within the National Library of Medicine, an arm of the National Institutes of Health.

Mr. Speaker, this measure looks to the future. It aims to make life better, healthier, and happier for Americans today and for generations and generations to come. It holds great promise for advances in the area of health care research and treatment.

Research on the human gene is one of the most exciting frontiers in medicine at this time, but the rapidly growing body of information is scattered and unwieldy. This center will link existing biotechnology data bases and make information available for worldwide dissemination. It will prevent duplication of research and therefore bring more frequent and faster breakthroughs in this critical area. The National Center for Biotechnology Information, therefore, holds out new hope for the millions of Americans who suffer from Alzheimer's disease, cancer, arthritis, mental illness, and other illnesses for which we currently have no cure.

I want to express my gratitude to the Appropriations Committee for its $8 million allotment to this greatly needed project. With the establishment of the National Center on Biotechnology Information, we begin an ambitious venture, to fit together the pieces of the genetic puzzle and to make a meaningful investment in our lifetime, and for the lives of Americans for generations to come.

Mr. Speaker, I am deeply indebted to my great colleague from California, the Honorable HENRY WAXMAN, chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment of the Committee on Energy and Commerce. Without his great skill and leadership, this bill would not be before us today. In addition, I want to commend the tremendous efforts of Senator LAWTON CHILES, my friend and colleague from the State of Florida. As the Senate sponsor of this bill, he has continued his longstanding outstanding efforts to make life better for all the people of America. He has done a remarkable job in seeing this bill on through to enactment.

So it is with great pleasure that I urge my colleagues to support this landmark measure. It will do much good for the health and welfare of the American people now and long into the future.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 2889, a bill that, in part, authorizes programs and policies related to AIDS. This is a bill that will be remembered as much for what was eliminated as for what it contains. As a cosponsor of the original legislation as introduced by Chairman WAXMAN, I wish to express my frustration at the loss of two of the most important provisions of the bill—confidentiality of HIV test results and antidiscrimination language. However, I am hopeful that both the confidentiality provisions and the antidiscrimination protections will be adopted early in the 101st Congress, the latter as part of the Americans with Disabilities Act.

In spite of millions of dollars and countless hours spent searching for one, there still is no cure for AIDS. Nor is there a vaccine to prevent HIV from taking hold in the human body. The only effective method for halting or even slowing the spread of this deadly virus that causes AIDS and related conditions is the education of all persons who might come in contact with it.

This bill provides for such education through the counseling of persons who are tested for HIV to inform them of sexual and drug use practices that carry with them the risk of transmission of the virus and ways in which they can protect themselves and others. The bill also authorizes extensive national and local educational programs.

The bill contains language that requires that no educational materials, curricula or counseling services that are developed with funds authorized in this bill may be "designed to promote or encourage, directly, homosexual or heterosexual sexual activity, or intravenous drug use."

It is important to understand the intent with which this language was drafted and voted into law by the House and Senate. It assures that educational materials and counseling services are designed and developed to effectively inform persons of the risk of transmission of HIV through certain activities. It provides that such materials and counseling should not be designed for the purpose of promoting human sexual activity of any form—either heterosexual, or homosexual, but rather should be designed for the purpose of preventing transmission of HIV.

Federal funds should not be used to promote either sexuality or drug use. However, it is essential that the educational materials and counseling services in question be designed to encourage behavior change both in the general population and especially among those persons who practice high-risk activities so that they stop their risky behavior and thus, reduce the spread of HIV.

Therefore, while the provision provides that materials and counseling should not be designed to promote or encourage sexual activities or drug use, the language also makes clear that the provision should not be interpreted in such a manner as to obstruct the development of effectual and appropriate materials and services that are designed to achieve behavior change.

The fiscal year 1988 Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations bill also contained language that restricted the content of AIDS educational materials. However, there have been many reports from public health educators that those restrictions, which were worded differently, have been interpreted to prohibit recipients from developing effective materials to prevent HIV transmission. Thus the House and Senate leaders on S. 2889 changed the language to clarify congressional intent. Now that fiscal year 1988 has expired, the chilling effect brought by the fiscal year 1988 appropriations bill no longer exists, allowing educational materials and counseling services developed under this statute to be effective in reaching and achieving behavior change in the persons who practice high-risk activities. I look forward to the Center for Disease Control issuing new guidelines to reflect the clarified intent of Congress regarding this important area.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 2889, an omnibus health bill. Among the provisions in this bill are several relating to AIDS, including provisions authorizing AIDS reserach programs, AIDS educational programs, home health care services and anonymous testing and counseling. Although I am disappointed that the final bill does not include all of the provisions originally incorporated in the House-passed bill, H.R. 5142, particularly the provisions relating to confidentiality, I am pleased that the House has now officially authorized a number of programs critical in addressing the AIDS epidemic.

I would like to specifically address the area of AIDS education. All public health experts agree that the main tool we currently have to fight AIDS is effective and targeted education. This is a disease which can be stopped—if we can simply educate individuals as to how to protect themselves from transmission of HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

In light of the importance of effective, targeted education, I am particularly pleased to see the final language that was adopted by the House and Senate with regard to restrictions on the development of such educational materials, and on related counseling. Over a year ago, a severe restriction was placed on the fiscal year 1988 Appropriations bill with regard to AIDS educational materials, providing that such materials could not promote or encourage homosexual sexual activity. Public Health officials and community health educators from across the country expressed concern that this provision could have a "chilling" effect on the development of effective AIDS educational materials, partly as a result of community groups self-censoring the materials they would produce.

In response to these concerns, Senator ALAN CRANSTON (D-CA) and Senator TED KENNEDY (D-MA) offered an alternative provision which was adopted as part of the fiscal year 1989 appropriations bill. That formulation added a few crucial terms to the provision. The fiscal year 1989 appropriations provision stated that Federal funds could not be used for AIDS educational programs which were designed to promote or encourage any form of sexual activity, homosexual or heterosexual. Thus, while that provision appropriately stated that it is not the role of the Federal Government to fund materials intended simply to increase sexual activity (of whatever kind), the provision made the concomitant statement that AIDS educational materials which are designed to bring about effective behavior change are indeed intended by Congress to be funded. This ensures that effective AIDS materials will be developed and hopefully will eliminate any chilling effect that may have been felt as a result of the previous fiscal year 1988 provision.

I am particularly pleased, therefore, to see that the provision ultimately adopted in S. 2889, with regard to both educational materials and counseling, tracks the provision added to the fiscal year 1989 appropriations bill. This provision states that funds may not be used to provide educational programs or counseling that are "designed to promote or encourage, directly, homosexual or heterosexual sexual activity or intravenous substance abuse." Thus, it is Congress' intent that materials that are designed and intended simply to increase sexual activity, of whatever kind, should not be receiving Federal funds under this bill. At the same time, we intend that materials that are designed to prevent the further transmission of HIV through targeted messages should be funded. Indeed, the provision includes an additional subsection explicitly stating that the language in the provision is not intended to prohibit providing accurate and effective information that will encourage the behavior change necessary to stop transmission of HIV.

Education, research, and care are our critical weapons in the fight against AIDS. I am pleased to support this bill which includes these provisions. I also look forward to the 101st Congress, where I will continue to work toward passage of confidentiality provisions originally included in H.R. 5142, the House AIDS bill, and the non-discrimination protection embodied in the Americans with Disabilities Act.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Members who worked to produce the Omnibus Health Amendments Act of 1988, which we passed on October 13. This bill includes authorization for a number of important Federal health programs, including several AIDS programs for which authorizing legislation had been passed by this or the other body. It includes some of the provisions of H.R. 5142, which I was privileged to cosponsor, and other provisions from S. 1220, which the Senate passed earlier this year. I was happy to see these provisions included in this omnibus bill so that they could be enacted in this Congress. AIDS is too important a matter for us to delay any longer in enacting the best advice of health professionals for a comprehensive national policy to address it.

For the same reason, I was disappointed that the omnibus bill we enacted did not contain most of the provisions passed by the House in September with regard to counseling and testing. I will do what I can to ensure that those programs are at the top of the agenda in both houses at the beginning of the new year.

I want to comment briefly on two very important provisions of the omnibus bill concerning a matter that has been the subject of too much unfortunate controversy in the Congress—that is, legislative guidance on the content of federally funded AIDS education and counseling programs. S. 2889, the Omnibus Health Amendments Act, authorizes a series of important Federal initiatives in education and counseling for the prevention of AIDS. The bill also contains guidance on the content of those programs.

Last year, in the 1988 appropriation for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, we included a restriction on the content of AIDS education that had unfortunate and unintended consequences for those critical efforts. The language we enacted created much confusion about the permissible scope of those efforts, and had a chilling effect on some of the best efforts of State and local health departments, and of private organizations.

We have now sought to correct this situation by changing the language on content of prevention programs, both in this year's appropriation and in S. 2889. S. 2889—specifically, sections 2432(e), 2500, and 2506(6)—provides that Federal funds should not be used to develop programs and activities that are designed solely to promote or encourage sexual activity, whether it be homosexual or heterosexual. These sections assure, however, that AIDS prevention programs must be designed to encourage behavior change, both in the general population and among those at the highest risk for infection, in order to reduce the risk of HIV transmission. Thus, the limitation that the materials should not be designed to promote or encourage sexuality should not be construed in a manner that would inhibit the development of appropriate and effective materials that are designed for the purpose of encouraging necessary behavior change.

I am especially concerned that Federal funds be available to the many State, local, and private groups that have taken the lead in AIDS prevention education and counseling activities. An example I am proud to cite is that of Vermont CARES—Committee for AIDS Resources, Education, and Services—which provides these services in my State, mainly through private funds and the selfless work of unpaid volunteers. Through their direct experience with all facets of this terrible epidemic, Vermont CARES and other groups like it around the country have developed considerable expertise in the design of effective prevention programs. It is absolutely essential that we make use of that expertise, and help these groups put it to good use, rather than attempting to reinvent the wheel, or to design these programs from our distant perspective in Washington.

I am pleased to see that S. 2889 will not interfere in their critically important work. Indeed, this act, with the provisions I mentioned, will make more Federal funds available to them. As I mentioned, many grant applicants have been confused about these requirements, and therefore it is important that the Centers for Disease Control, which will be administering most of these funds, act promptly to reassure them and to dissipate the chilling effect of the 1988 appropriation language. I urge the CDC to promulgate new regulations or guidelines based on the new congressional enactment as soon as possible.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GONZALEZ). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 2889.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on S. 2889, the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (C), the Secretary shall approve an abbreviated application for a drug unless the Secretary finds—

"(i) the methods used in, or the facilities and controls used for, the manufacture, processing, and packing of the drug are inadequate to assure and preserve its identity, strength, quality, and purity;

"(ii) the conditions of use prescribed, recommended, or suggested in the proposed labeling are not reasonably certain to be followed in practice or, except as provided in subparagraph (B), information submitted with the application is insufficient to show that each of the proposed conditions of use or similar limitations (whether in the labeling or published pursuant to subsection (i)) have been previously approved for the approved new animal drug referred to in the application;

"(iii) information submitted with the application is insufficient to show that the active ingredients are the same as those of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application;

"(iv)(I) if the application is for a drug whose active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed is the same as the active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application, information submitted in the application is insufficient to show that the active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed is the same as that of the approved new animal drug, or

"(II) if the application is for a drug whose active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed is different from that of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application, no petition to file an application for the drug with the different active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed was approved under subsection (n)(3);

"(v) if the application was filed pursuant to the approval of a petition under subsection (n)(3), the application did not contain the information required by the Secretary respecting the active ingredients, route of administration, dosage form, strength, or use with other animal drugs in animal feed which is not the same;

"(vi) information submitted in the application is insufficient to show that the drug is bioequivalent to the approved new animal drug referred to in the application, or if the application is filed under a petition approved pursuant to subsection (n)(3), information submitted in the application is insufficient to show that the active ingredients of the new animal drug are of the same pharmacological or therapeutic class as the pharmacological or therapeutic class of the approved new animal drug and that the new animal drug can be expected to have the same therapeutic effect as the approved new animal drug when used in accordance with the labeling;

"(vii) information submitted in the application is insufficient to show that the labeling proposed for the drug is the same as the labeling approved for the approved new animal drug referred to in the application except for changes required because of differences approved under a petition filed under subsection (n)(3), because of a different withdrawal period, or because the drug and the approved new animal drug are produced or distributed by different manufacturers;

"(viii) information submitted in the application or any other information available to the Secretary shows that (I) the inactive ingredients of the drug are unsafe for use under the conditions prescribed, recommended, or suggested in the labeling proposed for the drug, (II) the composition of the drug is unsafe under such conditions because of the type or quantity of inactive ingredients included or the manner in which the inactive ingredients are included, or (III) in the case of a drug for food producing animals, the inactive ingredients of the drug or its composition may be unsafe with respect to human food safety;

"(ix) the approval under subsection (b)(1) of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application filed under subsection (b)(2) has been withdrawn or suspended for grounds described in paragraph (1) of subsection (e), the Secretary has published a notice of a hearing to withdraw approval of the approved new animal drug for such grounds, the approval under this paragraph of the new animal drug for which the application under subsection (b)(2) was filed has been withdrawn or suspended under subparagraph (G) for such grounds, or the Secretary has determined that the approved new animal drug has been withdrawn from sale for safety or effectiveness reasons;

"(x) the application does not meet any other requirement of subsection (n); or

"(xi) the application contains an untrue statement of material fact.

"(B) If the Secretary finds that a new animal drug for which an application is submitted under subsection (b)(2) is bioequivalent to the approved new animal drug referred to in such application and that residues of the new animal drug are consistent with the tolerances established for such approved new animal drug but at a withdrawal period which is different than the withdrawal period approved for such approved new animal drug, the Secretary may establish, on the basis of information submitted, such different withdrawal period as the withdrawal period for the new animal drug for purposes of the approval of such application for such drug.

"(C) Within 180 days of the initial receipt of an application under subsection (b)(2) or within such additional period as may be agreed upon by the Secretary and the applicant, the Secretary shall approve or disapprove the application.

"(D) The approval of an application filed under subsection (b)(2) shall be made effective on the last applicable date determined under the following:

"(i) If the applicant only made a certification described in clause (i) or (ii) of subsection (n)(1)(G) or in both such clauses, the approval may be made effective immediately.

"(ii) If the applicant made a certification described in clause (iii) of subsection (n)(1)(G), the approval may be made effective on the date certified under clause (iii).

"(iii) If the applicant made a certification described in clause (iv) of subsection (n)(1)(G), the approval shall be made effective immediately unless an action is brought for infringement of a patent which is the subject of the certification before the expiration of 45 days from the date the notice provided under subsection (n)(2)(B)(i) is received. If such an action is brought before the expiration of such days, the approval shall be made effective upon the expiration of the 30 month period beginning on the date of the receipt of the notice provided under subsection (n)(2)(B) or such shorter or longer period as the court may order because either party to the action failed to reasonably cooperate in expediting the action, except that if before the expiration of such period—

"(I) the court decides that such patent is invalid or not infringed, the approval shall be made effective on the date of the court decision,

"(II) the court decides that such patent has been infringed, the approval shall be made effective on such date as the court orders under section 271(e)(4)(A) of title 35, United States Code, or

"(III) the court grants a preliminary injunction prohibiting the applicant from engaging in the commercial manufacture or sale of the drug until the court decides the issues of patent validity and infringement and if the court decides that such patent is invalid or not infringed, the approval shall be made effective on the date of such court decision.

In such an action, each of the parties shall reasonably cooperate in expediting the action. Until the expiration of 45 days from the date the notice made under subsection (n)(2)(B) is received, no action may be brought under section 2201 of title 28, United States Code, for a declaratory judgment with respect to the patent. Any action brought under section 2201 shall be brought in the judicial district where the defendant has its principal place of business or a regular and established place of business.

"(iv) If the application contains a certification described in clause (iv) of subsection (n)(1)(G) and is for a drug for which a previous application has been filed under this subsection containing such a certification, the application shall be made effective not earlier than 180 days after—

"(I) the date the Secretary receives notice from the applicant under the previous application of the first commercial marketing of the drug under the previous application, or

"(II) the date of a decision of a court in an action described in subclause (III) holding the patent which is the subject of the certification to be invalid or not infringed, whichever is earlier.

"(E) If the Secretary decides to disapprove an application, the Secretary shall give the applicant notice of an opportunity for a hearing before the Secretary on the question of whether such application is approvable. If the applicant elects to accept the opportunity for hearing by written request within 30 days after such notice, such hearing shall commence not more than 90 days after the expiration of such 30 days unless the Secretary and the applicant otherwise agree. Any such hearing shall thereafter be conducted on an expedited basis and the Secretary's order thereon shall be issued within 90 days after the date fixed by the Secretary for filing final briefs.

"(F)(i) If an application submitted under subsection (b)(1) for a drug, no active ingredient (including any ester or salt of the active ingredient) of which has been approved in any other application under subsection (b)(1), is approved after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, no application may be submitted under subsection (b)(2) which refers to the drug for which the subsection (b)(1) application was submitted before the expiration of 5 years from the date of the approval of the application under subsection (b)(1), except that such an application may be submitted under subsection (b)(2) after the expiration of 4 years from the date of the approval of the subsection (b)(1) application if it contains a certification of patent invalidity or noninfringement described in clause (iv) of subsection (n)(1)(G). The approval of such an application shall be made effective in accordance with subparagraph (B) except that, if an action for patent infringement is commenced during the one-year period beginning forty-eight months after the date of the approval of the subsection (b) application, the 30 month period referred to in subparagraph (C)(iii) shall be extended by such amount of time (if any) which is required for seven and one-half years to have elapsed from the date of approval of the subsection (b) application.

"(ii) If an application submitted under subsection (b)(1) for a drug, which includes an active ingredient (including any ester or salt of the active ingredient) that has been approved in another application approved under such subsection, is approved after the date of enactment of this paragraph and if such application contains reports of new clinical or field investigations (other than bioequivalence or residue studies) and, in the case of food producing animals, human food safety studies (other than bioequivalence or residue studies) essential to the approval of the application and conducted or sponsored by the applicant, the Secretary may not make the approval of an application submitted under subsection (b)(2) for the conditions of approval of such drug in the subsection (b)(1) application effective before the expiration of 3 years from the date of the approval of the application under subsection (b)(1) for such drug.

"(iii) If a supplement to an application approved under subsection (b)(1) is approved after the date of enactment of this paragraph and the supplement contains reports of new clinical or field investigations (other than bioequivalence or residue studies) and, in the case of food producing animals, human food safety studies (other than bioequivalence or residue studies) essential to the approval of the supplement and conducted or sponsored by the person submitting the supplement, the Secretary may not make the approval of an application submitted under subsection (b)(2) for a change approved in the supplement effective before the expiration of 3 years from the date of the approval of the supplement.

"(iv) An applicant under subsection (b)(1) who comes within the provisions of clause (i) of this subparagraph as a result of an application which seeks approval for a use solely in non-food producing animals, may elect, within 10 days of receiving such approval, to waive clause (i) of this subparagraph, in which event the limitation on approval of applications submitted under subsection (b)(2) set forth in clause (ii) of this subparagraph shall be applicable to the subsection (b)(1) application.

"(v) If an application (including any supplement to a new animal drug application) submitted under subsection (b)(1) for a new animal drug for a food-producing animal use, which includes an active ingredient (including any ester or salt of the active ingredient) which has been the subject of a waiver under subparagraph (B)(iv) is approved after the date of enactment of this paragraph, and if the application contains reports of clinical or field investigations or human food safety studies (other than bioequivalence or residue studies) essential to the new approval of the application and conducted or sponsored by the applicant, the Secretary may not make the approval of an application (including any supplement to such application) submitted under subsection (b)(2) for the new conditions of approval of such drug in the subsection (b)(1) application effective before the expiration of five years from the date of approval of the application under subsection (b)(1) for such drug. The provisions of this paragraph shall apply only to the first approval for a food-producing animal use for the same applicant after the waiver under subparagraph (B)(iv).

"(G) If an approved application submitted under subsection (b)(2) for a new animal drug refers to a drug the approval of which was withdrawn or suspended for grounds described in paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (e) or was withdrawn or suspended under this subparagraph or which, as determined by the Secretary, has been withdrawn from sale for safety or effectiveness reasons, the approval of the drug under this paragraph shall be withdrawn or suspended—

"(i) for the same period as the withdrawal or suspension under subsection (e) or this subparagraph, or

"(ii) if the approved new animal drug has been withdrawn from sale, for the period of withdrawal from sale or, if earlier, the period ending on the date the Secretary determines that the withdrawal from sale is not for safety or effectiveness reasons.

"(H) For purposes of this paragraph:

"(i) The term 'bioequivalence' means the rate and extent to which the active ingredient or therapeutic ingredient is absorbed from a new animal drug and becomes available at the site of drug action.

"(ii) A new animal drug shall be considered to be bioequivalent to the approved new animal drug referred to in its application under subsection (n) if—

"(I) the rate and extent of absorption of the drug do not show a significant difference from the rate and extent of absorption of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application when administered at the same dose of the active ingredient under similar experimental conditions in either a single dose or multiple doses;

"(II) the extent of absorption of the drug does not show a significant difference from the extent of absorption of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application when administered at the same dose of the active ingredient under similar experimental conditions in either a single dose or multiple doses and the difference from the approved new animal drug in the rate of absorption of the drug is intentional, is reflected in its proposed labeling, is not essential to the attainment of effective drug concentrations in use, and is considered scientifically insignificant for the drug in attaining the intended purposes of its use and preserving human food safety; or

"(III) in any case in which the Secretary determines that the measurement of the rate and extent of absorption or excretion of the new animal drug in biological fluids is inappropriate or impractical, an appropriate acute pharmacological effects test or other test of the new animal drug and, when deemed scientifically necessary, of the approved new animal drug referred to in the application in the species to be tested or in an appropriate animal model does not show a significant difference between the new animal drug and such approved new animal drug when administered at the same dose under similar experimental conditions.

If the approved new animal drug referred to in the application for a new animal drug under subsection (n) is approved for use in more than one animal species, the bioequivalency information described in subclauses (I), (II), and (III) shall be obtained for one species, or if the Secretary deems appropriate based on scientific principles, shall be obtained for more than one species. The Secretary may prescribe the dose to be used in determining bioequivalency under subclause (I), (II), or (III). To assure that the residues of the new animal drug will be consistent with the established tolerances for the approved new animal drug referred to in the application under subsection (b)(2) upon the expiration of the withdrawal period contained in the application for the new animal drug, the Secretary shall require bioequivalency data or residue depletion studies of the new animal drug or such other data or studies as the Secretary considers appropriate based on scientific principles. If the Secretary requires one or more residue studies under the preceding sentence, the Secretary may not require that the assay methodology used to determine the withdrawal period of the new animal drug be more rigorous than the methodology used to determine the withdrawal period for the approved new animal drug referred to in the application. If such studies are required and if the approved new animal drug, referred to in the application for the new animal drug for which such studies are required, is approved for use in more than one animal species, such studies shall be conducted for one species, or if the Secretary deems appropriate based on scientific principles, shall be conducted for more than one species.".

SEC. 602. PATENT INFORMATION.

(a) SECTION 512(b).— Section 512(b)(1) of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following: "The applicant shall file with the application the patent number and the expiration date of any patent which claims the new animal drug for which the applicant filed the application or which claims a method of using such drug and with respect to which a claim of patent infringement could reasonably be asserted if a person not licensed by the owner engaged in the manufacture, use, or sale of the drug. If an application is filed under this subsection for a drug and a patent which claims such drug or a method of using such drug is issued after the filing date but before approval of the application, the applicant shall amend the application to include the information required by the preceding sentence. Upon approval of the application, the Secretary shall publish information submitted under the two preceding sentences.".

(b) OTHER SECTIONS.—

(1) Section 512(c) is amended by adding at the end the following:

If the holder of an approved application could not file patent information under subsection (b)(1) because it was not required at the time the application was approved, the holder shall file such information under this subsection not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this sentence, and if the holder of an approved application could not file patent information under subsection (b)(1) because no patent had been issued when an application was filed or approved, the holder shall file such information under this subsection not later than 30 days after the date the patent involved is issued. Upon the submission of patent information under this subsection, the Secretary shall publish it.".

(2) The first sentence of section 512(d)(1) is amended by redesignating subparagraphs (G) and (H) as subparagraphs (H) and (I), respectively and by inserting after subparagraph (F) the following:

"(G) the application failed to contain the patent information prescribed by subsection (b)(1);".

"(2) Any request for data and information pursuant to paragraph (1) shall include a verified statement by the person making the request that any data or information received under such paragraph shall not be disclosed by such person to any other person—

"(A) for the purpose of, or as part of a plan, scheme, or device for, obtaining the right to make, use, or market, or making, using, or marketing, outside the United States, the drug identified in the application filed under subsection (b)(1), and

"(B) without obtaining from any person to whom the data and information are disclosed an identical verified statement, a copy of which is to be provided by such person to the Secretary, which meets the requirements of this paragraph.".

"(C) The act of dispensing a drug contrary to the provisions of this paragraph shall be deemed to be an act which results in the drug being misbranded while held for sale.

"(2) Any drug when dispensed in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection—

"(A) shall be exempt from the requirements of section 502, except subsections (a), (g), (h), (i)(2), (i)(3), and (p) of such section, and

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. Waxman] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madigan] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. Waxman].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on S. 2843, the Senate bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us, S. 2843, the Generic Animal, Drug, and Patent Restoration Act, is identical to H.R. 4982, which passed the House last week on the Suspension Calendar by voice vote.

The bill is supported by all the major interest groups that have worked on the bill, brand and generic animal drug companies, biotechnology companies, farmers, veterinarians, and a wide variety of companion animal organizations.

In 1984, when Congress considered and passed the generic human drug bill, the Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act, we discussed whether a similar provision was appropriate in the animal drug area. The Food and Drug Administration told us that it was. Unfortunately, due to the complexities of the human drug bill, we did not include animal drugs. S. 2843 picks up where the 98th Congress left off.

S. 2843 has two major provisions. First, the bill creates an expedited approval system for generic copies of post-1962 brand name animal drugs. Second, the bill provides for the extension of the 17-year patents covering animal drugs. Up to 5 years of the time lost due to Government review could be added back to the patent, so that brand name animal drug companies would be assured of additional market time to recoup their investments.

S. 2843 has one rather unusual provision. The bill excludes biotechnology-derived animal drugs from all parts of the bill. These animal drugs would not be eligible for copying by generic animal drug companies under title I and their patents would not be eligible for extension under title II.

This exclusion was requested by the biotechnology industry so that they could present their concerns about the inadequacy of their patents to the Judiciary Committees. They believe that the patents available to biotechnology-derived drugs do not provide the same kind of market protection as is available to traditional, chemically derived drugs.

The biotechnology industry has assured me that their sole reason in seeking this exemption is to have a period of time to make their concerns known to the Congress. I believe this is an appropriate way to proceed.

I want to pay special tribute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Tauke]. Not only was he the lead author of this legislation, but he also was responsible for working out the compromises that made this important bill possible. He understood the need in the farm community for this legislation and made sure that the bill balances the need for cheaper animal drugs with the need for greater incentives to produce new and better animal drugs. All interested parties—from drug companies to veterinarians to farmers to pet owners—owe Mr. Tauke their appreciation for his outstanding work.

I would urge adoption of this legislation. I think it is a worthwhile piece of legislation, following very closely the way we treat human drugs in terms of extending the patents for time lost at the Food and Drug Administration and making sure that generics, which are a lot cheaper, are available to the consumer.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill. This legislation is designed to hasten the FDA approval process for generic animal drugs while at the same time providing incentives for pioneer manufacturers to continue new drug research and development.

This bill reflects the very fine work of a very important and competent Member, Mr. Tauke, of the Energy and Commerce Committee who sponsored this legislation in the House. And the Senator from Utah, Mr. Hatch, who sponsored the bill in the Senate.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Kastenmeier], the chairman of the Subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary that has jurisdiction over patents.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California for yielding this time to me.

I understand that the bill as we are considering here this afternoon, as the gentleman from Illinois has suggested, is identical virtually with the bill that the House just passed a few days ago and which at least in that respect the other body, I think, has done a good job in terms of ratifying the House work on the bill.

I echo the comments of the gentleman from Illinois to the extent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Tauke] was the lead sponsor.

Both the gentleman from California [Mr. Waxman] and I were also original sponsors of the bill.

The bill did go before my committee. We did make certain amendments in the bill designed to meet certain objections, which when presented on the floor I think successfully met whatever objections may have remained.

The public does benefit from the bill in two particular ways; first, the availability of generic animal drugs for farmers, pet owners and very substantial other community consumers.

Second, research and development and the resulting innovation for animal drugs will be facilitated by the patent term extension portions of the bill, and the reality of the balance of these interests is demonstrated by the broad support the bill has generated.

I am pleased the bill has come back. I join the gentleman from Illinois in rueing the fact that the gentleman from Iowa and the work of the House is not reflected in the bill number, but nonetheless, I think in terms of what we achieve here for the public, it is a price that we ought to be willing to pay.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. Waxman] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 2843.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO MAKE A CORRECTION IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 5462, UNITED STATES-MEXICO BORDER REGION HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the enrollment of the bill, H.R. 5462, the United States-Mexico Border Region Housing and Community Development Act, the Clerk be authorized to correct a drafting error in the bill which was approved by the House this morning. Section 2(c) of the bill should be corrected to read as follows:

> (c) Distribution of Assistance.—Assistance shall be made available pursuant to this section in accordance with a distribution plan that gives priority to colonias having the greatest need for assistance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Kastenmeier). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

RECOGNITION OF MEMBER FOR SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I might be recognized at this time for the 60-minute special order I had previously reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Gonzalez). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order this afternoon in tribute to the Honorable Harold J. Daub, Jr.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

A TRIBUTE TO HON. HAROLD J. DAUB, JR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Bereuter] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to schedule this special order today to honor my very good friend and distinguished colleague from the 2d District of Nebraska, Harold J. Daub, Jr., better known to all of us as Hal Daub.

Calling for a special order for a departing colleague from one's home State delegation has become perhaps de rigueur in this Chamber, but I have asked for time this evening to recognize the accomplishments of my Cornhusker State congressional neighbor not so much from a sense of tradition as from a long-time acquaintanceship and friendship for Hal and out of great respect for his work in the House and in representing his constitutents.

There are many reasons why we as representatives choose to run or to serve in Congress. For Hal, it was a long-time and unflagging desire to serve the constituents of the Second District of Nebraska. Not only have Hal's constituents been extraordinarily and energetically well served, all Nebraskans and a great number of Americans everywhere have benefitted from Hal's service in Washington.

REPRESENTATIVE DAUB AND NEBRASKANS

Of the hundreds of Nebraskans who visit Washington each year, there was never an individual who Hal was too busy to see, nor apparently was there an issue in which Hal was uninterested. The concerns of someone from the panhandle of Nebraska always appeared to be just as important to Hal as those of his own constituents from Omaha and the Second District.

Be they farmers, ranchers, small businessmen, the elderly, high school students, whatever the group or the cause, they were welcomed by Hal to visit with him. And once Hal was persuaded about their issue or cause, they had a loyal, vocal, and tenacious ally in Congress in the person of our distinguished colleague from Nebraska, Representative Hal Daub.

While my friendship and working relationship with Hal extends over the 8 years we have served together in Congress, my wife Louise knew Hal and she went to grade school, junior and senior school with him. They graduated together from Omaha's Benson High School in 1959 and they were friends who lived about two city blocks apart.

After graduating valedictorian from his high school class, Hal went on to distinguish himself as a student at Washington University in St. Louis where he also graduated with honors. Later, he graduated from the University of Nebraska Law School in Lincoln.

After completing his college education, Hal enrolled in the army where he rose to the rank of captain in the U.S. Infantry.

During his tour of duty in Korea, our colleague met his lovely wife Cindy who has been an eager, energetic and politically knowledgeable and able partner for over 20 years. Side-by-side, they have worked together in raising three terrific children, Natalie, John, and Tammy building their careers, and serving Nebraskans in Washington.

After completing his active duty service in the U.S. Army, Hal and Cindy returned to Omaha where he joined a prestigious law firm. Later he became the general counsel to the Standard Chemical Manufacturing Co. in Omaha where he pursued a business career until his election to Congress.

REPRESENTATIVE DAUB'S PUBLIC SERVICE

While Hal and Cindy Daub worked hard to build a career and raise their family, they were also contributing hours of work to civic, charitable and political causes. Hal's sense of public duty has guided not only his career, but also his life and his principles.

Although Hal Daub was elected to Congress in 1980, that was certainly not the beginning of his public service career. Back home in Nebraska, Hal was an activist in political, charitable, and civic organizations.

His neighbors in Omaha could readily find him at the local VFW or American Legion Post or at the optimist Club or at the Reserve Officers Association. If they couldn't find him at any of those places, they could check at the Nebraska Heart Association or at the United Way headquarters or at his Masonic lodge.

If that didn't work, sooner or later they could always find Hal at Republican Party headquarters. Hal began his career in politics as a precinct worker, rose to the chairmanship of the Douglas County Republican Party in Omaha, and served on the State Central Committee as well as the National Congressional Advisory Council.

REPRESENATATIVE DAUB GOES TO WASHINGTON

In 1980, Hal Daub won election to the House. On his arrival in Washington, Hal quickly applied his unlimited energy and dynamic leadership skills to the legislative process. In 1981, he was reported to be the first member of his freshman class to see a bill he authored passed into law.

During his first two terms in the 97th and the 98th Congresses, Hal served on a number of key committees including Public Works and Transportation, Government Operations, Small Business, and the Select Committee on Aging.

Hal's goal, however, was to serve on the Ways and Means Committee, and it is a tribute to his legislative work and his political skills in the House among his colleagues that he was named to a seat on that very influential committee.

A biography of Hal that is contained in "Politics in America for the 100th Congress" states that "Daub pursues his goals with the persistence and aggressiveness of a salesman who has completed a course in positive thinking." It was his record, recognized expertise in tax matters, persistence, and organizational skills that landed him a seat on the Ways and Means Committee.

I believe it is no exaggeration to say that all of HAL's colleagues who know him recognize HAL for his thorough preparation, his honesty and straightforwardness. I think it is a compliment to my colleague from Nebraska, and certainly fair to say, that he effectively, intensely, and passionately pursued objectives he felt were vitally important to his constitutents, to Nebraska and to America.

One of the many reasons that I take pride in representing Nebraska is the concern that Nebraskans have for one another. In Congress, and on the Ways and Means Committee, HAL has provided an invaluable service to many of my constituents, including those involved in farming, ranching, and small businesses in the First and Third Congressional Districts as well.

LEGISLATIVE ACCOMPLISHMENTS

While HAL has an impressive list of legislative accomplishments, I will mention just a few examples of efforts that have been important to the constituents in my district and certainly to taxpayers throughout the country.

For instance, when it was discovered that a provision in the 1984 Deficit Reduction Act would require farmers and ranchers to keep itemized records of where they drove their cars and trucks for tax purposes, HAL worked hard to move legislation that repealed the contemporaneous recordkeeping provisions. This saved farmers hundreds of hours of paperwork.

In his first term, HAL was successful in getting a provision included in the Economic Recovery Act of 1981 that allowed an individual to deduct charitable contributions from his gross income even though the deductions may not have been itemized.

I especially want to recognize HAL DAUB's work on a number of agricultural provisions which were also included in the 1986 Tax Bill. HAL is one of the few tax specialists in the House who recognize that too often the tax code has encouraged nonfarmers to engage in farming only to shelter nonfarm income.

HAL was absolutely correct and totally candid in observing that the involvement of nonfarmers in agriculture for tax loss purposes contributed to surplus production and lower commodity prices making it more difficult for family farmers to make a living from their farms.

During the 1986 Tax Reform Bill, HAL worked to eliminate agricultural tax breaks that were primarily benefiting nonfarm investors, and he fought to maintain other deductions which strengthened and preserved family-owned and operated farm operations.

For instance, HAL fought to preserve the deduction for various soil and water conservation expenditures and eliminating deductions for tearing up and cultivating marginally productive land.

HAL also offered an amendment to the tax bill to allow self-employed individuals, and spouses and dependents to deduct up to 25 percent of the amounts paid for health insurance for a taxable year.

A particular problem facing many farmers in recent years was the discharge of indebtedness. HAL spearheaded an effort to include in the 1986 tax bill a provision that allowed certain farmers to exclude the discharge of indebtedness from the calculation of taxable income.

And, my Nebraska colleague, HAL DAUB, has fought to preserve various provisions relating to business energy credits.

These are only a few of HAL DAUB's achievements in the House, but they are indicative of HAL's understanding of the nuts and bolts of the tax code, and his recognition of the role he could play within the Ways and Means Committee, and the legislative process generally to solve people's problems.

CONSTITUENT SERVICE

HAL's work on behalf of Nebraskans was not confined to Washington. His District Office in Omaha is well known for its excellent and tenaciously effective constituent service in solving the problems which people had with the Federal Government. In that respect his staff accurately reflected HAL DAUB's personal priorities and commitments.

Be they problems relating to social security, the IRS, the Veterans' Administration, the INS, the Small Business Administration, the USDA, or other Federal agencies, no constituent problem was too small or large to be addressed.

Organizationally, HAL DAUB runs a tight ship in both Washington and Omaha, and his many loyal and dedicated staffers are to be commended for their years of work and service. They have been helpful to me and my staff and we have enjoyed working with them.

HAL'S CAMPAIGNS

HAL's hard work on behalf of his constituents has earned him an extraordinary number of friends and supporters and the respect of the people of his Congressional District. His constituents demonstrated that by returning him to Congress by record margins in his district, a district with a registration majority in the Democratic Party. In 1984, HAL received the highest reelection percentage that any candidate had received in that district in over 20 years. HAL has always had extremely well run and well organized campaigns, and since 1982 he has always won by comfortable margins.

One of the hallmarks of every HAL DAUB campaign was his inclusion of literally hundreds of people, young and old, in his campaign. HAL DAUB's "marching army of volunteers" earns the respect and envy of anyone who has ever been in a political campaign. HAL's first principle of campaigning was that they should be fun for the volunteers.

HAL's many friends and supporters all attest to the loyalty and the esprit de corps among the volunteers in any of HAL's congressional campaigns. They were always willing to go the extra mile and give every effort to ensure a victory. The loyal support of volunteers who work freely and give their time and effort is perhaps one of the higher compliments that any Congressman can receive.

HAL DAUB was also a matchmaker with his many volunteers. I am told that dozens of former staff and campaign volunteers met their spouses while working for HAL during campaigns.

CONCLUSION

As HAL leaves the House, he can certainly take pride in his solid record of legislative achievement; in the fact that he has ably served his district, his party, and his country; and in the fact that he and Cindy have won the appreciation and affection of Nebraska and its people.

More importantly, however, HAL leaves the House with his ideals, principles and integrity intact and his reputation as a solid contributing American citizen even further enhanced.

While HAL may be leaving this Congress, I am absolutely certain that he is not leaving public service behind him. HAL's commitment to this country and the people of Nebraska will continue to be a guiding light for our colleague in setting his future course.

In Congress, HAL DAUB has fought many legislative battles with a high degree of success. In politics, as in life in general, you win some and you lose some. Defeat, however, has never set HAL back, nor dimmed his resolve or commitment in Congress or the legislative process. With his indomitable nature, I'm sure he will always see any setbacks as being only temporary.

In every election night speech, HAL DAUB has quoted a statement once made by Teddy Roosevelt. It not only sums up HAL's spirit and his purpose for being involved in politics, it is also a compliment and a tribute to those who have opposed HAL in election campaigns. To quote Roosevelt, and HAL DAUB invariably did:

> Far better it is to dare mighty things, to win glorious triumphs, even though checkered by failure, than to take rank with those poor spirits who neither enjoy much nor suffer much, because they live in the gray twilight that knows not victory nor defeat.

HAL DAUB has known both victory and defeat and they have made him a stronger, more seasoned Member of Congress.

HAL, you have bestowed honor, credibility, and integrity upon this Congress and we will miss your presence in the House of Representatives. All of us in the House who have served with you, wish you and your wonderful wife and helpmate Cindy a prosperous, productive, and very pleasant future.

On a more personal note, as a member of a low-population State with the resultant small-State delegation in the House, the contacts and consultations between HAL DAUB and this Member were very numerous indeed. Delegations from low-population States with great geographic, social, and economic diversity, like the Cornhusker State, must work with an especial degree of cooperation and energy. In my personal and legislative relationships with my distinguished colleague from Omaha, I have always found that special level of cooperation, friendly candor, forthrightness, honesty, and personal concern. For those very special actions by and characteristics of my colleague, I am especially appreciative. Thank you, friend and colleague, U.S. Representative HAL DAUB, for being the kind of special person and friend that you are—and for making an extraordinarily important contribution to your State and Nation. This Member will miss you in the House, but I look forward to your continuing important contributions and to extending our friendship.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, today we commemorate the nearly 8 years of service in the House of Representatives of my coworker and colleague, Congressman HAROLD (HAL) JOHN DAUB, JR., of the Second Congressional District of Nebraska. He is leaving the House at the end of the present term.

Together with our other Member from Nebraska, Mr. DOUG BEREUTER, the three of us have worked effectively together on many issues for the benefit of the people of Nebraska.

Despite the disparity in voter registration in his district, HAL DAUB won bipartisan support in all four of the elections that sent him to Congress.

After election in 1980, Congressman HAL DAUB served on the Small Business Committee, Government Operations Committee, Public Works Committee, the Select Committee on Aging, and most recently on the Ways and Means Committee.

He was responsive to his constituents in representing the people of Omaha and the adjacent areas.

His persistence, hard work, and singleness of purpose served him well in his journey from birth in North Carolina, through years of growth and education in Nebraska, service as a captain in the Army, practice as a lawyer, as a business executive, and currently as a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives.

We will long remember his family, including his wife, Cindy, and three children, Natalie Ann, John Clifford, and Tammy Renee. Their love and devotion for HAL demonstrate his success as husband and father as well as public servant.

I know that I join thousands of others in expressing to HAL DAUB our best wishes and hopes for good fortune wherever circumstances may lead him.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, it is with regret that we bid farewell to our friend and colleague, HAL DAUB, who is retiring from Congress in January.

In the span of but four terms in the U.S. House of Representatives, HAL DAUB proved he was an outstanding legislator. As a fellow member of the House Ways and Means Committee, I saw him in action. He quickly grasped a detailed knowledge of tax policy. Only recently, we observed him playing an important role on the Health Subcommittee in the debate over long-term medical care. He faithfully fought for the interests of his Nebraska constituents, striving for fairness in the Tax Code for farmers, as well as the middle class and those involved in small business.

The American farmer, as well as his Nebraska farm constituents, are indebted to HAL for the monumental efforts he put into the writing of the agricultural provisions included in the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

He has been continually cited for his record of holding down Federal spending. He has also received awards for his efforts on behalf of small business and minority business.

His service as an infantry officer in the Army is reflected in his stand for a strong defense. HAL DAUB knew from personal experience that a nation must be strong to protect the freedoms of its citizens.

It was an enlightening pleasure to have worked alongside HAL DAUB. It was good luck to have him as a friend. We wish him and his lovely wife, Cindy, all of the best as he leaves this House of Representatives.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my colleagues today as we salute the gentleman from Nebraska, HAL DAUB, who is leaving at the end of the 100th Congress after serving the Second District of Nebraska since 1981.

HAL DAUB and I came to the House 8 years ago and as members of the same freshman class, we worked together during those first months in office at the start of the Reagan administration in support of programs to turn the Nation's economy around and get the country moving again.

I've always been impressed with HAL DAUB's persistence and hard work which have led to his legislative successes over the years and his gaining a seat in the 99th Congress on the Ways and Means Committee. He has been an advocate for the farm community in tax and trade legislation and an advocate for older Americans in long-term health care proposals.

His expertise as an attorney who has practiced immigration law was also evident during the debate in the 98th and 99th Congresses on reform of the Nation's immigration laws.

HAL DAUB is a talented legislator and has been an effective Member of Congress for 8 years and an able representative of the people of Nebraska's Second District. We wish him well as he pursues life outside of Congress and hope he will continue his public service work in some capacity in the future.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER] for taking time to schedule a special order for my good friend, HAL DAUB, who is leaving Congress at the end of this year.

I wanted to participate in today's special order, because HAL and I have worked very closely together on the Ways and Means Committee since 1985. As members of the Health Subcommittee, we've worked jointly on important issues like long-term care for the elderly; the Daub-Donnelly long-term care measure is the product of those efforts. HAL and I were the first members of the House to come out with a serious, budget neutral long-term care proposal last year.

On other issues within the jurisdiction of our committee. HAL and I have worked closely. One example is the tax treatment of life insurance company investments; another is the mortgage revenue bond program which help low- and middle-income individuals afford their first homes. HAL was an original sponsor, with me, of legislation to extend the mortgage revenue bond program—legislation which is now in conference with the Senate.

I would think that the people of Nebraska are going to miss HAL DAUB's dedication on senior citizen issues, housing issues, and so many other areas where he has committed himself on our committee. I know that I am going to miss his forceful voice on so many issues of importance.

Mr. Speaker, the one thing that I have always noticed about the Committee on Ways and Means is the bipartisan spirit in which we operate. As one Democrat who has worked closely with one of the respected Republican members of our committee, Mr. DAUD, let me say to HAL: I've enjoyed our years of service together, and I wish you well in the years ahead.

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer tribute to my colleague, HAL DAUB of Nebraska, who is leaving the Congress after 8 years. HAL has been a tremendous asset to this body. We are surely losing a key player in the work we do.

The persistence and tenacity of HAL DAUB to succeed started early on in his life. Since then, he has put together one achievement after another. For one, HAL is an Eagle Scout. In high school, he was senior class valedictorian, president of the student council and the drum major of his marching band. In law school at the University of Nebraska, HAL was voted most outstanding law student in the Nation in 1966. Admirably serving his country in the U.S. Army from 1966 to 1988, his natural leadership ability brought him to the rank of captain.

Back home in Nebraska after his military service, HAL quickly became a respected attorney and an exemplary member of his community, belonging to, among several other organizations, the American Legion, the VFW, the Sons of the American Revolution, and the Urban League of Nebraska. He also served on the boards of Nebraska Heart Association, the United Way and the Combined Health Agency.

In local politics, Hal moved his way up from a precinct worker to the chairman of the Douglas County Republican Party, a member of the Nebraska Republican Party's State Central Committee and the National Congressional Advisory Council.

He accomplished all these things while starting a fine family with his lovely wife Cindy.

In Congress, it has been my privilege to serve with Hal in the House Ways and Means Committee. He has been an active, articulate and distinguished Member counted on to contribute thoughtful ideas and suggestions as to how the Ways and Means Committee can continue to improve the United States Tax Code. His special insights and expertise will certainly be missed.

Hal has accumulated a full plate of accomplishments during his life and during his time serving the U.S. Congress. I am certain he will continue to excell in private and public service. It has been a pleasure to work with Hal Daub and I wish Hal continued success in the future.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, as this Congress prepares to adjourn, I want to join many of our colleagues in offering our best wishes to a department Member, Nebraska's Hal Daub.

Hal's dedication and effort are going to be missed by many in the House, especially those who represent farm districts. His dedication to the farmers of Nebraska and his willingness to work with others produced some outstanding results. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 and the Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 contain examples of his work on tax issues farmers wanted to resolve. Hal's intense, dedicated approach to legislation made him a force to be reckoned with on trade, health and the other complex issues that confront the Committee on Ways and Means.

Hal Daub's contributions as a Member of Congress have made his service here notable. Everyone talks about the ideal of representing the public with vigour and thoroughness throughout one's Congressional service. Hal Daub can honestly say he lived up to that ideal, and those of us who have worked with and relied upon him are going to miss his counsel.

(c) SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(A) the Sacramento, California, area has had in place a flood control system that has been classified as protecting against floods with recurrence intervals of up to 125 years;

(B) local governmental entities in the Sacramento metropolitan area have been working diligently with the State of California, the Army Corps of Engineers, and the Bureau of Reclamation since the occurrence of a heavy storm in 1986 to formulate and implement a comprehensive plan to provide high level, efficient flood protection to the region;

(C) the Federal Emergency Management Agency, in response to studies by the Army Corps of Engineers indicating increased flood vulnerability attributable to increased estimates of the frequency of large storms in the region, has begun a process of re-analyzing the flood risks in the Sacramento area, and this analysis is likely to result in substantially increased flood elevation requirements under the National Flood Insurance Program;

(D) changed flood elevation requirements attributable to a change in flood elevation determinations by the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency will cause severe disruption in the Sacramento region and could precipitate the break-up of the political, institutional, and economic relationships sustaining the high level, comprehensive, flood protection effort;

(E) failure to implement a comprehensive plan would leave substantial portions of the Sacramento area without necessary flood protection, and, further, could impose on the Federal Government various, substantial costs related to emergency responses and damage claims in the event of a major flood;

(F) the Federal purposes embodied in the National Flood Insurance Program to minimize development in flood plains, to minimize damages caused by floods, and to reduce requirements for costly flood protection projects remain valid for the Sacramento metropolitan area, and impose upon its local governmental jurisdictions an obligation to exercise their authorities to avoid undue exposure to the dangers of floods and to voluntarily comply to the maximum extent practicable, consistent with other purposes of this subsection, with the National Flood Insurance Program standards that are anticipated to be applicable to the Sacramento area following expiration of the period set by paragraph (2);

(G) the City and County of Sacramento have each provided assurances to the Congress that they will not designate any increases in urbanization beyond lands already so designated in their general plans during the period set forth in paragraph (2), and, in addition, that in the exercise of their discretion to approve new development they will give careful consideration to—

(i) an evacuation-emergency response plan;

(ii) mechanisms by which to attempt to provide notice to all buyers of new structures;

(iii) retention of natural floodways; and

(iv) recommendations to all buyers of new structures to purchase flood insurance;

(H) the City and County of Sacramento, in their discretion, reserve the authority to impose elevation or other requirements for new construction based upon best available flood data if facts indicate the necessity of doing so; and

(I) maintenance of the Federal flood elevation requirements now in effect for the Sacramento area for the limited period set forth in paragraph (2) will facilitate implementation of the high level, comprehensive plan for flood protection in the Sacramento area, and is therefore in the interest of Sacramento, the public safety, and the United States.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4352) to amend the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act to extend programs providing urgently needed assistance for the homeless, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

SHORT TITLE

The House bill was entitled the Omnibus McKinney Homeless Assistance Act of 1988. The Senate amendment was entitled the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments of 1988. The conference report contains the Senate title with an amendment to include "Act" within the title, the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988.

TITLE I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

BUDGET COMPLIANCE

The House bill contained a provision that was not included in the Senate amendment to require that funding for Fiscal Years 1989 and 1990 not exceed the appropriate aggregate levels established in the respective Concurrent Budget Resolution. The conference report contain the House provision.

ANNUAL PROGRAM SUMMARY BY COMPTROLLER GENERAL

The House bill contained a provision which required the Comptroller General (GAO) to annually submit a report to Congress on its findings on disbursement and use of funds under the Emergency Food and Shelter (FEMA) program and the HUD homeless assistance programs. The Senate amendment contained a provision which required GAO to submit an annual summary of each program authorized under the McKinney Act. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

TITLE II—INTERAGENCY COUNCIL ON THE HOMELESS

PREPARATION OF BIMONTHLY BULLETIN

The House bill contained a provision which required the Interagency Council on the Homeless to distribute a bimonthly bulletin to states, local governments and public and private nonprofit organizations on federal resources available under the McKinney Act, including application deadlines and federal agency contact persons. The Senate amendment contained a similar provision except that it additionally required the bimonthly bulletin to include the appropriate person on the Federal Council and changed the entities which received bimonthly bulletins to State Interagency Councils, state coordinators and designated state agencies. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment to require that each State, including State contact persons, also receive the bimonthly bulletin.

PROVISION OF PROFESSIONAL AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

The Senate amendments contained a provision that was not included in the House bill which required the Federal Interagency Council to employ at least two Regional Coordinators, but no more than five, to coordinate the Council's activities within the ten standard federal regions. The Senate amendment required these coordinators to interpret federal regulations, assist in the federal application process, including grants, coordinate McKinney programs with other federal programs, and develop recommendations for regional solutions to homeless issues. The Senate amendment required the coordinators to schedule biennial regional workshops in each of the 10 federal regions, with at least one workshop in each region every two years, and to hold at least five regional workshops by September 30, 1989. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM TIMETABLES

The Senate amendment contained a provision that was not included in the House bill which required each federal agency, which is an Interagency Council Member and administers a McKinney program, to provide the Council, within 90 days of the enactment date, with a timetable regarding program funding availability and application deadlines, and required the Council to furnish this information to each State Interagency Council, State agency and State Coordinator. The conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment to require the Interagency Council to furnish the program timetables to each State, including State contact persons.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

The House bill authorized the appropriation of $800,000 for the Interagency Council on the Homeless for Fiscal Year 1989 and such sums as may be necessary for Fiscal Year 1990. The Senate amendment authorized the appropriation of $1.2 million for each Fiscal Year 1989 and 1990. The Conference report authorizes to be appropriated $1.1 million for Fiscal Year 1989 and $1.2 million for Fiscal Year 1990 for the Interagency Homeless Council.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF STATE INVOLVEMENT

The Senate amendment contained provisions that were not included in the House bill which (1) encouraged each State to establish their own State Interagency Council on the Homeless; (2) provided requirements for membership meetings and functions for the State Interagency Councils; (3) encouraged States to designate State Homeless Coordinators and gave States incentives for establishing State Coordinators by allowing the Federal Interagency Council to award grants to supplement the State Coordinators compensation; and (4) required States to designate a lead agency to coordinate homeless assistance if either a State did not establish a State Interagency Homeless Council or a State Coordinator. The conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment that deletes most of the original Senate provisions except that (1) each State is required to designate a State Contact Person who is to receive and disseminate information and communications from the Federal Interagency Council on the Homeless, including the Federal Council's bimonthly bulletin, and (2) each State is encouraged to establish a State Interagency Council on the Homeless or designate a lead State agency to coordinate homeless assistance and interact with the Federal Interagency Council on the Homeless and other State and local agencies as necessary. The conferees believe that this State Homeless Contact Person will assist in promoting communication and the familiarity among governmental entities and nonprofit groups within each State about the McKinney Homeless Assistance programs. The conferees do not intend these contact persons, any State Interagency Homeless Council, or a State lead agency to receive funding provided for the Federal Interagency Council for the Homeless. The conferees also hope to encourage the establishment of State Interagency Councils or the designation of State lead agencies to effectively disseminate and utilize information on McKinney Homeless Assistance programs, and believe that States can develop their own structure and provisions for a State Interagency Council, taking into account the provisions included in the Senate amendment.

TITLE III—FEDERAL EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT FOOD AND SHELTER PROGRAM

REPORT ON EMERGENCY FOOD AND SHELTER GRANT PROGRAM

The House bill contained a provision which required the Emergency Food and Shelter National Board to utilize data in establishing program guidelines that reflect the number of long-term unemployed workers in the localities involved, including those whose unemployment benefits have run out and those who have been out of work so long that they are no longer actively seeking employment. The Senate amendment contained a provision which required the FEMA Director to submit a report to the appropriate Congressional committees, within 6 months of the enactment date, on the Emergency Food and Shelter Program which includes proposed legislation for a minimum of 2 alternative statutory formulas incorporating the criteria on which the distribution and disbursement of program grants is based and the supporting evidence on the effectiveness of each formula in targeting grants to areas that have the greatest need. The conference report contains the Senate provison with an amendment that incorporates the House provision as a criterion to be considered in each alternative statutory formula for distributing Emergency Food and Shelter program assistance, except that the National Board shall utilize data that reflects the number of long-term unemployed workers in each State. The conferees understand that the Bureau of Labor Standards has such data on a statewide basis.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

The House bill authorized the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary for FY 1990. The Senate amendment authorized the appropriation of $134 million for FY 1990. The conference report authorizes to be appropriated $129 million for Fiscal Year 1989 and $134 million for Fiscal Year 1990.

SUNSHINE PROVISION

The Senate amendment contained a provision that was not provided in the House bill which required that the books, documents, papers, and records of FEMA Food and Shelter program recipients be made available for public inspection and copying. The conference report does not contain the Senate provision.

TITLE IV—HOUSING ASSISTANCE

SUBTITLE A—COMPREHENSIVE HOMELESS ASSISTANCE PLAN [CHAP]

CONTENTS OF COMPREHENSIVE PLAN

Description.—The House bill contained a provision that was not included in the Senate amendment that required a CHAP to describe how facilities and services will be used to meet homeless needs. The conference report contains the House provision.

Contact Person—The House bill contained a provision that was not included in the Senate amendment that required each entity submitting a CHAP to identify the appropriate contact person or agency which coordinates homeless assistance. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment to clarify that contact person's role is to serve as a source of information concerning the contents of the CHAP.

Drug/Alcohol Assurances.—The House bill contained a provision that required an assurance that each recipient and project sponsor shall administer, in good faith, a policy designed to ensure that the homeless facility is free from the illegal use, possession, or distribution of drugs or alcohol. The Senate amendment contained a similar provision except that it required certification that each recipient and project sponsor shall take all necessary actions to ensure that the facilities receiving McKinney housing assistance are free of illegal drug use and alcohol abuse, and that beneficiaries shall have the right to be served in a drug-free and alcohol-free environment. The conference report contains the House provision.

The conferees emphasize that this requirement is not to be used to deny McKinney homeless assistance to any recipient, project sponsor or governmental entity acting in good faith nor does it allow shelter operators to deny assistance to individuals suspected of drug or alcohol abuse. Rather, the intent of this provision is to ensure actions are undertaken in good faith to provide a safe environment within homeless shelters.

APPLICATIONS

The House bill contained a provision that was not included in the Senate bill which required certification by each public official responsible for submitting CHAPs for any jurisdiction which will be served that federally funded homeless activities are consistent with the CHAP. The conference report does not contain the House provision.

PERFORMANCE REVIEWS

The Senate amendment contained a provision that was not included in the House bill that required entities submitting a CHAP to include in their annual submissions, their response to the HUD recommendations which are made available to them at least two months before the beginning of the fiscal year. The conference report contains the Senate provision. The conferees emphasize that States and entitlement communities would be required to respond only to HUD recommendations received in a timely manner.

COORDINATION

The Senate amendment contained a provision that was not included in the House bill that, in a case where a State has designated a lead agency to coordinate assistance to the homeless, required each federal agency that administers McKinney homeless assistance to provide appropriate program information to the State lead agency on the homeless in order to facilitate State coordination. The conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment to require such federal agencies to provide appropriate program information to State contact persons.

SUBTITLE B—EMERGENCY SHELTER GRANT [ESG] PROGRAM

DISTRIBUTION OF ASSISTANCE BY STATES TO PRIVATE NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS

The House bill contained a provision which allowed States to distribute ESG assistance to private nonprofit organizations and required local governments to certify their approval of nonprofit sponsored projects. The Senate amendment contained a similar provision except it required local governments to certify their support of the nonprofit organizations' project. The conference report contains the House provision.

ESSENTIAL SERVICES

The Senate amendment contained a provision that was not included in the House bill which (1) increased the existing limitation on the use of Emergency Shelter Grants program funds for essential services from 15 percent to 25 percent, (2) allowed States and local governments receiving ESG assistance to comply with the percentage limitation on an aggregate basis (existing law only allows local governments to do so) (3) additionally allowed Emergency Shelter Grants funds to be used to complement eligible services.

The conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment to increase the essential services limitation from 15 percent to 20 percent.

HOMELESSNESS PREVENTION AS AN ELIGIBLE ACTIVITY

The Senate amendment contained several provisions not included in the House bill on the use of Emergency Shelter Grants Program funds for homelessness prevention activities. The Senate amendment permitted program assistance to be provided for efforts to prevent homelessness such as financial assistance to families who have received eviction notices or notices of termination of services if (1) the family cannot make the required payments because of a sudden income reduction, (2) the program assistance is necessary to avoid eviction or termination of services, and (3) there is a reasonable prospect that the family will be able to resume payments within a reasonable time period. The Senate amendment required recipients to certify to the Secretary that their homelessness prevention efforts (1) have a demonstrable link to the prevention of imminent homelessness, (2) constitute the most effective use of all or part of their ESG funds, and (3) do not supplant any fundng for existing homeless prevention activities. The Senate amendment also required the HUD Secretary to report to Congress within one year of the enactment date on the vartious programs to prevent homelessness implemented by grantees with particular focus on the different methods employed by grantees to determine eligibility for homelessness prevention assistance.

The conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment to (a) include homeless prevention activities within the 20 percent essential services cap and (b) delete the certification requirements included in the Senate provision except that an additional requirement is provided to ensure that program funds can be used if they do not supplant any funding for existing homeless prevention activities. The conference report also contains the requirement for the Congressional report on various programs to prevent homelessness except that the Comptroller General (GAO), instead of HUD, is required to conduct a study and report to Congress. The GAO report shall examine the homeless prevention programs administered under the Federal Emergency Management Food and Shelter Program, the Department of Health and Human Services Emergency Assistance program and the State of New Jersey's Homelessness Prevention Programs and any other Federal, State or local homelessness prevention programs. The GAO report shall include such recommendations for legislation as the Comptroller General determines appropriate including recommendations on how to prevent homelessness resulting from mortgage foreclosures.

REQUIRED USE OF A BUILDING AS A SHELTER

The House bill contained a provision which provided that for projects which receive funding for essential services or maintenance and operation, a building must be used as a shelter for the full period during which the assistance is provided and deleted the existing requirement that a building remain a shelter for 3 years in such cases. The Senate amendment contained several provisions which (1) required a shelter to be available for the period specified in the contract or grant agreement and (2) required that for projects involving major rehabilitation or conversion, a building must be used for not less than 5 years or for a longer period if HUD determines that the value of the rehabilitation justified a longer term and deleted the existing 10-year requirement in such cases. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment permitting a shelter site to be changed if the assistance includes only operating funds or essential services and the new site would continue to serve essentially the same general population. The conference report also amends existing law to clarify that, in the case of rehabilitation that is less than major the structure should remain a shelter for a period of time not less than three years (and not more than 10 years) that is commensurate with the value of federal assistance provided to the project.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

The House bill authorized the appropriation of $125 million for the Emergency Shelter Grants program for Fiscal Year 1989 and such sums as may be necessary for Fiscal Year 1990. The Senate amendment authorized the appropriation of $120 million for each Fiscal Year 1989 and 1990. The conference report authorizes $120 million for the Emergency Shelter Grants program for Fiscal Year 1989 and $125 million for Fiscal Year 1990.

SUBTITLE C—SUPPORTIVE HOUSING DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

AVAILABALITY OF OPERATING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE FOR NEW STRUCTURES

The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment which authorized program funds to be used for operating and technical assistance without regard to whether the proposed project involved a new or existing structure, and expanded the definition of "project" to include a structure or portion of a structure which only receives operating or technical assistance. The conference report contains the House provision.

PROJECT SPONSOR

The Senate amendment contained a provision that was not included in the House bill which authorized public housing authorities to become project sponsors under the Permanent Homeless Handicapped Program. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

MAXIMUM PERIOD OF RESIDENCE IN TRANSITIONAL HOUSING

The House bill contained a provision that was not included in the Senate amendment which allowed project sponsors, instead of HUD, to determine the length of stay of homeless persons in transitional housing projects. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment to require that the maximum length of stay in a transitional housing project shall be 24 months or for such longer period as the Secretary determines is necessary to facilitate the transition of homeless individuals and families to independent living. The conferees believe that project sponsors may need more time than the 18-month period now allowed by the Department through regulation, in order for homeless persons to become self-sustaining and make the transition to more permanent living arrangements.

DEFINITION OF PERMANENT HOUSING

The House bill contained a provision that increased the 8 person limit contained in the existing definition of permanent housing for handicapped persons to a 12 person limit. The Senate amendment contained a provision which permitted the Secretary to waive the existing 8-person limitation if the applicant demonstrates that (1) local market conditions and economies of scale dictate the development of a larger project and (2) such development will achieve the neighborhood integration objectives of the program within the context of the affected community. The conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment which deletes the test on economies of scale.

The Senate amendment contained a provision that was not included in the House bill which provided that where units are to be added to an existing facility, the units will not be counted for purposes of the program limit if the facility meets the program's neighborhood integration objectives. The conference report does not contain the Senate provision.

USE OF ADVANCES TO REPAY DEBT

The House bill contained a provision that was not included in the Senate amendment which allowed supportive housing program advances to repay outstanding debt owed on a loan for an existing structure which will be used for the homeless. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment to make debt service of an existing mortgage eligible for program advances for those projects which were not being used as supportive housing prior to receipt of federal funds, and requires this provision to apply to those projects which received program rewards for fund reservations on or after November 1, 1987.

ELIGIBLE ACTIVITIES

The Senate amendment contained a provision that was not included in the House bill which authorized the use of Supportive Housing Program funds for annual payments for operating costs of permanent handicapped homeless projects, except the percentage of assistance was limited to not than 50 percent in the first year of operation and 25 percent in the second year. The Senate amendment also allowed program recipients to receive both program advances and moderate rehabilitation grants. The conference report contains the Senate provisions.

EMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE

The House bill contained a provision that was not included in the Senate amendment that allowed Supportive Housing Demonstration Program assistance to be used for grants to establish and operate an employment assistance program for transitional housing residents which shall include employment of residents in the operation and maintenance of housing and payment of the resident's transportation costs to their place of employment and gives funding priority to those transitional housing projects which contain an employment assistance program. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment to clarify that employment assistance programs qualifying for such a priority may be assisted with Mckinney Act of other non-McKinney Act funds.

REPAYMENT OF ADVANCES

The House bill contained a provision that we not included in the Senate amendment that required project sponsors to assure HUD that they will operate projects for 5 years, instead of 10 years. For every year in excess of 5 years that the project continued to be operated as supportive housing or as housing for lower income persons, 20 percent of the program advance would be forgiven and would not have to be repaid. The conference report does not contain the House provision.

LIMIT ON ADVANCES AND GRANTS

The Senate amendment contained a provision that was not included in the House bill that authorized the Secretary to increase the limit in program advances from $200,000 to $400,000 for projects in areas which the Secretary finds have high acquisition and rehabilitation costs. The conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment that includes moderate rehabilitation within this limitation.

The conference report also contains a provision which authorizes the use of Supportive Housing advances for new construction under limited circumstances. The provision is intended to give the Secretary the authority to help fund the construction of a model supportive housing project on land donated by the University of California at Berkeley. The conferees fully expect that the City of Berkeley will apply for Supportive Housing funds during fiscal year 1989.

SITE CONTROL

The House bill contained a provision that required program applicants to document that they have site control for their projects within 12 months of receiving federal funds and gives priority in the selection of projects to those which have site control. The Senate amendment contained a provision that prohibits the Secretary from requiring that supportive housing applicants demonstrate that the applicant owns or has control of the site for the proposed project. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment to require project sponsors to give reasonable assurances of site control not later than 6 months after notification of an award for great assistance. The conference report also requires sponsors to obtain site control within 12 months after notification of an award for grant assistance or else funds will be recaptured and reallocated. Finally, the conference report allows a final site to be different from the original site if the proposed project is within the same jurisdiction, and requires this provision to apply to those projects which received program awards or funds reservation on or after November 1, 1987.

FLOOD PLAIN RESTRICTIONS

The conference report contains a provision ensuring that flood plain standards applicable to housing acquired, rehabilitated or assisted with Supportive Housing funds shall be no more restrictive than the standard applicable under Presidential Executive Order 11988 (May 24, 1977) to the other housing programs authorized under Title IV of the McKinney Act. This provision has become necessary because regulations governing the Supportive Housing Demonstration program have required more restrictive flood plain standards than those imposed on other homeless housing programs. While it is not preferable to place projects for the homeless in flood prone areas, current federal law would allow such placement provided that there is no practicable alternative and the property is insured under the National Flood Insurance Act. To ensure safety, existing law provides special requirements for projects that will be used for the handicapped and others with limited mobility. These and other guidelines will provide safeguards against placement of supportive housing projects in unsafe areas. The Conferees believe that this provision is consistent with the Department's regulatory requirements for other HUD housing programs.

MATCHING FUNDS REQUIREMENTS

The House bill contained a provision which allowed salaries paid to staff, salaries paid to transitional housing residents under an employment assistance program, and the value of volunteer time and services to be considered matching funds for the Supportive Housing Demonstration Program. The Senate amendment contained a provision which (1) required all supportive housing recipients, including States which must certify in the case of the Permanent Handicapped Homeless Programs, to supplement any program advances or moderate rehabilitation grants with equal amounts of funds from non-federal sources, and (2) defined non-federal funds as including (a) State or local agency funds, (b) the non-federal share of funds under other federal programs, (c) the value of any donated material or building, and (d) the value of any lease on a building.

The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment to include the Senate defintion of non-federal funds, with the exception of the "non-federal share of funds under other federal programs", and to required States, in the case of permanent handicapped homeless projects, to certify that program advances on moderate rehabilitation grants will be supplemented with an equal amount of non-federal funds.

REPORT TO CONGRESS

The House bill contained a provision that was not included in the Senate amendment which required the Secretary to annually submit to Congress a report on the Supportive Housing Demonstration Program which includes findings, conclusions and program recommendations, and required the report to be submitted by the Secretary within 3 months after each fiscal year and within 6 months for FY 1988. The conference report contains the House provision.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

The House bill authorized the appropriation for the Supportive Housing Demonstration program of $105 million for Fiscal Year 1989 and such sums as may be necessary for Fiscal Year 1990. The Senate amendment authorized the appropriation of $100 million for each Fiscal Year 1989 and 1990. The conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment to authorize $100 million for Fiscal Year 1989 and $105 million for Fiscal Year 1990 for the Supportive Housing Demonstration program.

REALLOCATIONS

The House bill contained a provision which allowed HUD to reallocate any funds remaining after the final rounds of each category under the Supportive Housing program to fund eligible program activities. The Senate amendment contained a similar provision except that it allowed unobligated funds to be reallocated for general use for the Supportive Housing program or the Sec. 8 Single Room Occupancy for the Homeless program. The conference report contains the House provision.

SUBTITLE D—SUPPLEMENTAL ASSISTANCE FOR FACILITIES TO ASSIST THE HOMELESS PROGRAM [SAFAH]

USE OF ASSISTANCE AND RESERVATION OF FUNDS

The House bill contained provisions that were not included in the Senate amendment that clarified that Supplemental Assistance program funds can be used for both supportive services and operating expenses. The conference report contains the House provisions.

SITE CONTROL

The conference report contains a provision which requires project sponsors to give reasonable assurances of site control not later than 6 months after notification of an award for grant assistance. The conference report also requires sponsors to obtain site control within 12 months after notification of an award for grant assistance or else funds will be recaptured and reallocated. Finally, the conference report allows a final site to be different from the original site if the proposed project is within the same jurisdiction, and requires this provision to apply to those projects which received program awards or fund reservations on or after November 1, 1987. The conferees fully expect the Secretary of HUD to allow the city of Newark to change the site for the SAFAH project for which it was awarded $881,329 in December 1987 in accordance with this provision.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

The House bill authorized the appropriation of $27 million for fiscal year 1989 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1990. The Senate amendment authorized the appropriation of $10 million for each fiscal year 1989 and 1990. The conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment to authorize the appropriation of $10 million for fiscal year 1989 and $11 million for fiscal year 1990 for the Supplemental Assistance for Facilities to Assist the Homeless program.

SUBTITLE E—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SECTION 8 ASSISTANCE FOR SINGLE ROOM OCCUPANCY DWELLINGS

INCREASE IN BUDGET AUTHORITY

The House bill authorized an increase in budget authority of $40 million for fiscal year 1989 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1990 for the Section 8 Single Room Occupancy Dwelling for the homeless. The Senate amendment authorized an increase in budget authority of $50 million for each fiscal year 1989 and 1990. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

REHABILITATION OF EFFICIENCY UNITS

The Senate amendment contains a provision that was not included in the House bill which allowed Single Room Occupancy assistance to be used by public housing authorities (PHAs) to rehabilitate efficiency units if PHAs agree to pay the additional cost of rehabilitating and operating units. The conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment to require owners, instead of public housing authorities, to agree to pay the additional costs.

FIRE AND SAFETY IMPROVEMENTS

The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill that defined the term 'major spaces' as hallways, large common areas, and other areas specified in local fire, building, or safety codes. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT OF COST LIMITATION

The House bill contained a provision that was not included in the Senate amendment that repealed the existing $14,000 per unit cost limitation on Single Room Occupancy (SRO) Dwellings. The conference report contains a provision that requires the SRO per unit cost limit to be increased annually based on increases in construction costs.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

APPLICABILITY

The House bill contained a provision that was not included in the Senate amendment that applied the amendments made in Titles I-V of the bill to funds received before, on or after the enactment date. The conference report does not contain the House provision.

ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT AND HISTORIC PRESERVATION

The House bill contained a provision which applied the expedited process for compliance with Environmental Policy requirements of the 1974 Housing Act which is applicable to the Community Development Block Grant program to all McKinney Housing Assistance programs. The Senate amendment contained a similar provision except that it applied the expedited process for compliance with the Historic Preservation Requirements of the 1974 Housing Act, which is applicable to the UDAG program, to the Emergency Shelter Grants program only. The conference report contains the House provision. The Administration has informed the conferees that historic preservation is also included within the expedited process under Sec. 104(g) of the 1974 Housing Act, and thus the Senate reference to historic preservation is unnecessary.

REPORT ON EFFECT OF RENT CONTROL ON HOMELESSNESS

The House bill contained a provision which required the Secretary to report to Congress, within 12 months of the enactment date, on the impact of local housing rent controls and regulations on the rate of homelessness in major cities in the United States and sets forth various factors to be evaluated within the report. The Senate amendment contained a similar provision except that it did not reference the impact of rent controls on homelessness and required the Secretary to report within 6 months of the enactment date. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment to also include within the study the effect of rent control on the development, supply, availability, and affordability on housing in localities which have rent controls.

REPORT ON ALLOCATION FORMULAE

The Senate amendment contained a provision that was not included in the House bill that required the Secretary to report to Congress, not later than March 1, 1989, on the examination of whether an alternative system of distributing McKinney Housing Assistance can be developed based on homeless population data. The conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment that deletes the homeless population data requirement and instead requires that the alternative system be developed based on allocating funds to communities that have the greatest need for assistance to the homeless.

REGULATIONS

The House bill contained a provision that was not included in the Senate amendment to require the Secretary, or other Federal entities involved, to issue program requirements by notice within 60 days of the enactment date and regulations within 12 months of the enactment date for Titles I-V of the House bill. The conference report contains the House provision except that this provision does not apply to that portion of Title V that deals with Federal Surplus Property.

TITLE V—IDENTIFICATION AND USE OF SURPLUS FEDERAL PROPERTY

Section 501. Identification and Use of Unutilized and Underutilized Public Buildings and Property

The Senate version (section 107) amends section 501 of the McKinney Act in several particulars. The House bill makes only one amendment, namely, to section 501(a).

Both the House bill and the Senate version amend section 501(a) by requiring the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to make his identifications of underutilized properties as suitable for assisting the homeless in a timely fashion. He must do so within 2 months following the surveys of need that section 202 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 484) requires executive agencies continuously to make of property under their control. The conference agreement retains this amendment language. The amendment thus emphasizes that implementation of the Secretary's responsibility is to be prompt as well as active and continuous.

The conference agreement inserts in the existing section 501(a) the words "unutilized or" before the word "underutilized". This makes clear that the latter term was not intended to exclude unutilized property, and corrects an apparent GSA administrative misinterpretation of the existing language's intent.

The Senate version amends section 501(b)(1) by deleting the words "declare the property excess to the agency's need" following "intentions to" and inserting in lieu thereof "make the property available, on an interim basis, for use by the homeless".

The conference agreement keeps the existing requirement that an agency head report his intention of determining identified property excess or provide reasons for his not so determining. It is advantageous to keep this requirement, since otherwise the Senate amendment's language might be construed as excluding property declared excess from further consideration as facilities for the homeless. After Federal utilization screening, excess property may be considered for interim use by permit or for determination as surplus, thus making it eligible for disposal (for use as facilities for the homeless) under section 203(k) of the Federal Property Act. The conference amendment adds (rather than substitutes) a requirement that an agency head must state an intention to make the identified property (that is not declared excess) "available, on an interim use basis," for use to assist the homeless or provide reasons for not doing so. This requirement recognizes that identified nonexcess property should also be considered for interim use under other authority of law to assist the homeless. The general principle that the controlling agency may provide for interim use of its property by permit is well established under Justice Department opinions and GSA regulations (cf. 41 CFR 101-47.203-9).

The Senate amendment conforms section 501(b)(2) by deleting the words "declared excess." The conference agreement both retains this phrase and conforms it to the language that was added to subsection (b)(1) to provide for interim use availability.

The conference agreement revises section 501(d)(1) to reflect the changes made in section 501(b). It retains the existing requirement that ownership of buildings and property not be transferred from the Federal Government. It also retains the requirement that property which has been determined surplus pursuant to the Federal Property Act may be made available under section 501 only through the use of leases for at least one year. The conference agreement adds a requirement that property not determined to be surplus may nevertheless be made available for interim use by lease (longer than 1 year) or by permit. The conference agreement recognizes that other law established for some controlling agencies the authority to lease and (as the agreement did in section 501(b)) that there is a general authority for all executive agencies to provide interim-use permits.

The Senate amendment revises section 501(d)(2) by deleting the words "surplus Federal buildings" and substituting "underutilized Federal buildings." The conference agreement modifies section 501(d)(2) to clarify that the furnishing of property for facilities to assist the homeless is a permissible use in promoting the public health under section 484(k) of title 40, U.S. Code (section 203(k) of the Federal Property Act) with respect to property identified under subsection (a) that has been determined surplus. Also, since section 501(d)(1) requires leases as a method of disposing of surplus property, the conference agreement deletes (as unnecessary) a reference to leases in the introductory portion of the language used by the conference agreement, which reads: "With respect to property identified under subsection (a) which has been designated as surplus property, . . ." This provision should not be construed to preclude treatment of surplus property use to assist the homeless as a public health purpose generally under section 203(k).

The conferees wish to emphasize their expectation that the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Administrator of General Services will recognize fully the special urgency of the need for such properties for use to assist the homeless and give priority of consideration to necessary lease/hold interest disposals. (See H. Report 100-174, p. 86.) The conferees urge on all executive branch agencies a similar emphasis in the application of other authority that may enable such properties to be made available for interim use.

Section 501, as amended, does not, of course, provide that every property identified as suitable under subsection (a) must be made available but only provides that such properties to be made available in accordance with other applicable Federal law. To give priority of consideration to the use of property to assist the homeless does not require disregarding consideration of other uses that may serve important Federal and national needs for which other law provides.

TITLE VI—REVISION AND EXTENSION OF PROGRAMS OF HEALTH CARE FOR THE HOMELESS

SUBTITLE A—CATEGORICAL GRANTS FOR PRIMARY HEALTH SERVICES AND SUBSTANCE ABUSE SERVICES

Current Law

Under section 340 of the Public Health Service (PHS) Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services is authorized to make grants directly to public and private nonprofit entities to deliver health care, including primary care and substance abuse services, to the homeless. Grantees must match at least 25 percent of the cost of the program from non-Federal funds, in cash or in kind; the Secretary may waive this requirement in the case of nonprofit private grantees under the section 330 Community Health Center program. The FY 1988 authorization is $30 million.

House Bill (Sections 601-604)

The House bill would extend the Section 340 program for an additional 3 years at authorization levels of $61.2 million in FY 1989, $63.6 million in FY 1990, and $66.2 million in FY 1991. In addition, the bill would, effective October 1, 1989, raise the local matching requirement from 25% to 33⅓% for grantees in their second or subsequent year of funding. The bill would extend the Secretary's authority to waive this matching requirement in exceptional circumstances with respect to all nonprofit private entities, not just those receiving section 340 funds. The House bill further clarifies that homeless individuals eligible for services under the 340 grant program include residents of transitional housing, and makes clear that 340 grantees may continue to provide health services to an individual for up to a year after the individual has become a resident in permanent housing and is no longer homeless.

Senate Amendment (Sections 301-305)

The Senate amendment parallels the House bill but does not increase the percentage of matching funds required of grantees.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill. The conferees intend that grantees may, at their option, use section 340 funds to provide dental, vision, or podiatry services to the homeless where medically necessary.

SUBTITLE B—BLOCK GRANT FOR COMMUNITY MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Current Law

Under Part C of Title V of the PHS Act, the Secretary of HHS is authorized to make allotments to the States for the provision of community mental health services, outreach, case management, and related services to homeless individuals who are chronically mentally ill. States are required to provide 25% of the costs of delivering these services from non-Federal funds, in cash or in kind. The FY 1988 authorization is "such funds as may be necessary." The appropriation for FY 1988 was $11.4 million.

House bill (Sections 611-613)

The House bill would extend the authorization for this Block Grant for an additional 3 years at the level of $35 million in FY 1989, $36 million in FY 1990, and $38 million in FY 1991. The bill would direct the Secretary to make grants to the States on a competitive basis if the amounts appropriated in any given year are insufficient to fund the minimum allotment of $275,000 to each State. The bill also provides that if a State fails to submit an application for its allotment, fails to prepare an application that complies with the Block Grant requirements, or informs the Secretary that it does not intend to spend its full allotment, the Secretary must use unallotted funds to make grants to public and nonprofit private entities in that State to provide mental health services to the homeless. In addition, the bill would establish a minimum allotment of $50,000 for Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

Senate Amendment (Section 307)

The Senate amendment would extend the current Block Grant authority for an additional 3 years at an authorization level of "such funds as may be necessary."

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with the following modifications. The authorization levels would be $35 million in fiscal years 1989 through 1990 and "such funds as may be necessary in 1991." If the amounts appropriated in any fiscal year are insufficient to provide each State with an allotment of $150,000, the Secretary would be required to make grants to the States on a competitive basis for the purpose of providing mental health services to the homeless.

SUBTITLE C—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR COMMUNITY DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

Current Law

Section 504(f) of the PHS Act authorizes the Community Mental Health Services Demonstration Projects under which the Secretary, acting through the National Institute of Mental Health, makes grants to States, localities, and private nonprofit entities for demonstration projects and research relating to the delivery of community services to homeless chronically mentally ill individuals, among others. Section 512(c) of the PHS Act authorizes the Community Demonstration Projects for Alcohol and Drug Abuse Treatment under which the Secretary, acting through the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, makes grants to community-based public and private nonprofit entities to develop and expand alcohol and drug abuse treatment services for homeless individuals.

House Bill (Sections 621–622)

The House bill would extend both the authorization for the Community Mental Health Services Demonstration Projects and the authorization for the Community Demonstration Projects for Alcohol and Drug Abuse Treatment at the level of $10 million in FY 1989, $11 million in FY 1990, and $12 million in FY 1991, respectively.

Senate Amendment (Sections 306–307)

The Senate amendment would extend the authorization for the Community Mental Health Services Demonstration Projects at the level of $11 million in FY 1989, $11.5 million in FY 1990, and such sums as are necessary in FY 1991. The amendment would extend the authorization for the Community Demonstration Projects for Alcohol and Drug Abuse Treatment at the level of $20 million in FY 1989, $25 million in FY 1990, and such sums as are necessary in FY 1991.

Conference Agreement

With respect to the Community Mental Health Services Demonstration Projects, the conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. With respect to the Community Demonstration Projects for Alcohol and Drug Abuse Treatment, the conference agreement would authorize $14 million in FY 1989, $17 million in FY 1990, and such sums as necessary in FY 1991.

TITLE VII. EDUCATION TRAINING AND COMMUNITY SERVICES PROGRAMS

SUBTITLE A. HOMELESS ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Section 701. Adult Education for the Homeless

House bill authorized $11 million. Senate amendment authorized $10 million. House recedes to the Senate with an amendment providing for the implementation of a program either directly or through grants and contracts.

Section 702. Education for Homeless Children and Youth

House bill authorized $6 million. Senate amendment authorized $5 million House recedes. Section also includes a technical amendment to section 722(b) of the Act.

Section 703. Job Training for the Homeless

House bill authorized $13 million with $2.2 million for sec. 738. Senate amendment authorized $12 million with $2.0 million for sec. 738. Senate recedes.

Section 704. Emergency Community Services Homeless Grant Programs

House bill authorized $42 million. Senate amendment authorized $40 million. Senate recedes to the House with an amendment providing that it shall be left to the discretion of the Secretary to enforce the 60-day requirement.

The conferees are aware that many states have not released funds received for homeless activities under section 704 to community action agencies in a timely manner and that some states have yet to release FY-1988 funds. Therefore, the conference agreement retains the House provision requiring that states release funds received for homeless activities under Section 704 to community action agencies within 60 days of receipt of such funds. This provision is not intended to provide community action agencies with a right of action against states that do not comply with the disbursement requirement.

The conferees intend that the provision included in both the House bill and the Senate amendment, regarding the use of funds for homelessness prevention, shall govern the expenditure of funds appropriated pursuant to this part for fiscal years 1988, 1989 as well as for upcoming fiscal years.

Section also includes a technical amendment correcting mathematical errors in the House bill relating to the treatment of the Territories.

Section 705. Older Americans Act Technical Amendment

Senate recedes.

SUBTITLE B. JOB TRAINING PARTNERSHIP ACT

The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, included a provision to provide incentive bonuses to service providers which successfully train and place long-term welfare recipients. The House recedes with amendments. These amendments include:

DEFINITIONS

(a) The conference agreement defines "long-term recipient" as having received welfare assistance for 24 of the 28 months preceding participation in the JEDI program. This allows for people who went off welfare for a brief period of time. Senate bill requires 24 continuous months.

(b) The conference agreement defines "continuous employment" as 4 out of 5 quarters. This allows a State to collect a bonus if a JEDI graduate becomes briefly unemployed. Senate bill required 4 continuous quarters.

Categorical eligibility: The conference agreement makes clarifying changes in the Senate version.

Additional eligibility requirements: The conference agreement is the same as the Senate except that it allows States to collect bonus if participant was unemployed for one quarter because of plant closure or natural disaster, or is off welfare and enrolls in school and makes measureable progress.

Bonus amounts: Senate bill sets the first year bonus at 75% of the cash welfare benefit the Federal government paid the JEDI participant prior to his employment. After the second year, the bonus is 50%, after the third year, the bonus is 25%. The conference agreeement changes the bonuses to 75% for each of the years.

Applications and verifications: The Conference Report is the same as the Senate amendment except that:

(a) it requires States to give the Department of Labor 30 days notice before beginning participation, and

(b) it requires Department of Labor to approve or deny State applications for bonuses within 60 days of receipt.

Ratable reductions: The conference agreement provides that, if Congress appropriates insufficient money to pay all the bonus claims, then the amount paid to each State shall be reduced ratably. If an excess is appropriated, then it shall be distributed ratably.

JEDI administrative funds: The conference agreement stipulates that from bonus monies awarded to states, 15 percent will be reserved for the Governor's use for administrative costs in implementing the program. The remaining bonus monies will be passed through ratably to the Service Delivery Areas that contributed to the attainment of the bonus monies. Of that pass-through money, SDA's may keep 10 percent for their administrative costs, with another 5 percent available for administration if a need is demonstrated to the Governor for additional costs. Incentive payments may be made to serve organizations that have been effective in demonstrating JEDI services. Senate version provided a flat 15% to States.

Assisting States with data collection: The conference agreement:

(a) Requires Department of Labor to provide continual technical assistance to States on how to collect the data they will need to collect the bonuses.

(b) Requires Department of Labor to annually report to Congress how data collection could be improved.

Start-up money: The conference agreement stipulates that States may apply to the Department of Labor for financial assistance based on need. The Senate amendment has no similar provision.

Authorization of start-up money: Authorizes the use of up to $5 million for "start-up" costs.

Performance standard: The conference agreement:

(a) Creates an additional performance standard for the JEDI program. The performance standard in no way changes existing performance standards.

(b) Requires Department of Labor to report to Congress on the effect of the new standard.

Carryover funds: The conference agreement strikes the Senate provision restricting the amount of funds that states may carry over from one fiscal year to the next.

Summer youth: The Conference agreement strikes the provision of the Senate amendment which would provide for a full year AFDC youth training program.

Evaluation: The Conference agreement provides for a more specific and thorough evaluation of the JEDI program. The conferees intend that the Secretary also report on the various types and duration of training provided to long term welfare recipients, and on the relative effectiveness of such training methods.

Authorization: The Conference agreement and the Senate amendment provide for an authorization of such sums to fund the JEDI program. No funds shall be appropriated under this part unless funding in any fiscal year for title II-A exceeds any change in the consumer price index from the amounts appropriated for the previous fiscal year.

House and Senate conferees agreed to drop a provision relating to the Women's Infants and Children's program (WIC) because it has been enacted into law as part of the Hunger Relief Act.

TITLE IX—AID TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN

1. AFDC EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE (TITLE IX OF THE HOUSE BILL)

Present Law

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (P.L. 100-203), prohibits the Secretary of Health and Human Services, prior to October 1, 1988, from taking any action that would have the effect of implementing, in whole or in part, the proposed regulations published in the Federal Register on December 14, 1987. These regulations would have restricted the use of AFDC emergency assistance funds for homeless families and would have limited States' authority to use AFDC funds for shelter in temporary quarters, whether as a basic or special need.

Under present law, States may operate an emergency assistance program for needy families with children, if the assistance is necessary to avoid the destitution of the child, or to provide living arrangements in a home for the child. The statute authorizes 50 percent Federal matching funds for emergency assistance furnished for a period not in excess of 30 days in any 12-month period. Current regulations state that Federal matching is available for emergency assistance authorized by the State during one period of 30 consecutive days in any 12 consecutive months, including payments which are to meet needs which arose before the 30-day period, or are for such needs as rent which extend beyond the 30-day period.

AFDC regulations also allow States to include, in their State standards of need, provision for meeting "special needs" of AFDC applicants and recipients. The State plan must specify the circumstances under which payments will be made for special needs. Some States use AFDC emergency assistance and/or special needs funds to provide assistance to homeless families, including shelter in so-called "welfare hotels."

House Bill

(a) Extends, through September 30, 1989, the prohibition on implentation of the regulations proposed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services on December 14, 1987.

(b) Requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to review current policy with respect to the use of AFDC funds in the form of emergency assistance or special needs payments to meet emergency needs of AFDC eligible families.

(c) Requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to submit a report to Congress by April 1, 1989. The report would include recommendations for statutory and regulatory changes designed to: (1) improve the ability of the AFDC program to respond to emergency needs of AFDC eligible families; and (2) eliminate the use of AFDC funds for shelter costs in so-called "welfare hotels."

(d) Authorizes 5 State or local demonstration projects designed to reduce the number of families in welfare hotels and expand the availability of transitional housing.

Under the demonstration, a State or locality would be permitted to use AFDC funds to pay the operating costs (including debt service) of transitional facilities for homeless AFDC families. The normal AFDC match would apply. In order to participate in the demonstration, the State or locality must demonstrate to the Secretary of Health and Human Services that:

—for each transitional facility that is made available, the State or locality will permanently discontinue using an equal number of welfare hotel rooms currently used to house homeless AFDC families.

—the transitional facility can provide shelter and services to a homeless AFDC family at the same or less cost than a welfare hotel and that there will be no net cost to the Federal government in fiscal year 1989 or any subsequent fiscal year.

The term welfare hotel would be defined as a commercial or similar transient facility offering accommodations in a commercial hotel or motel operated by a privately owned for profit entity, or any similar establishment that does not meet the definition of transitional facility. The term transitional facility would be defined as a facility operated by a State, locality or non-profit organization which at least provides temporary and private sleeping accommodations, temporary eating and cooking accommodations, and services to help families locate and retain permanent housing.

The demonstration would extend for five years, beginning in fiscal year 1989.

Senate Amendment

No provision.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with respect to the moratorium on regulations and the study, modified to require that the report of the study be issued by July 1, 1989. It does not include the demonstration authority proposed in the House bill. It also includes the following demonstration authority.

In order to enable States to provide housing for homeless families who are recipients of aid to families with dependant children under a State plan approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act in transitional facilities instead of in commercial or similar transient facilities, at least 2 but not more than 3 States may undertake and carry out demonstration projects. States may use either public or private nonprofit agencies in carrying out the demonstration. Demonstration projects shall meet such conditions and requirements as the Secretary shall prescribe.

Funds may be used for rehabilitation or construction of transitional housing facilities, and to provide on-site social services at the facilities. The facilities must be easily convertible to permanent housing when they are no longer needed for transitional housing.

To be approved, a State AFDC agency must demonstrate that the project will:

(a) provide transitional facilities only for homeless families who are recipients of aid to families with dependent children who are residing in commercial or similar transient facilities;

(b) permanently reduce the number of rooms used to house homeless families who are recipients of such aid in commercial or similar transient facilities by the number of units made available in transitional facilities; and

(c) provide that the total cost of cash assistance provided to families residing in these facilities plus the cost of grants under this provision must result in a total Federal cost that is no greater than the cost of housing (including payments to cover basic needs and services) homeless families in commercial or similar transient facilities. The GAO will be required to review each application for grants under this provision and report to the Finance and Ways and Means Committees its analysis of whether or not the application meets this criterion.

Authorize an appropriation of $20 million to be available until expended.

2. PREVENTING FRAUD AND ABUSE IN HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS (SECTIONS 262 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT)

Present Law

No provision.

House Bill

No provision.

Senate Amendment

The Senate amendment would permit the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to require that an applicant or participant (including members of an applicant's or participant's household) disclose his or her social security number or employer identification number. This authority is limited to programs involving loans, grants, interest or rental assistance of any kind, or mortgage or loan insurance, and to assure that the level of benefits provided under these programs is correct.

The Senate amendment also requires, as a condition of eligibility for HUD programs involving initial and periodic review of income, that applicants sign a consent form authorizing the Secretary, or the public housing agency or owner responsible for determining eligibility or benefits to request that current or previous employers verify salary and wage information. The Social Security Act is also amended to require State unemployment insurance agencies to release wage and unemployment compensation information.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment modified to restrict the release of wage and unemployment compensation data only to officers and employees of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and public housing authorities. The wage and UI information may not be released to private owners. In addition, the authorization is limited to 5 years.

The requirement in the Senate amendment to permit the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to require an individual to disclose his social security number is deleted. This provision has been enacted into law (P.L. 100-242).

3. STUDY OF ELIGIBILITY PROCESSES UNDER AFDC, MEDICAID AND FOOD STAMP PROGRAMS (SECTION 308 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT)

Present Law

No provision.

House Bill

No provision.

Senate Amendment

The Senate amendment requires that the Department of Health and Human Services contract with the University of South Carolina College of Social Work to conduct a study of the reasons for denials and withdrawals of applications made under the AFDC, Medicaid and Food Stamp programs in South Carolina.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (i.e., no provision).

TITLE X—HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

SUBTITLE A—HOUSING ASSISTANCE

INCOME ELIGIBILITY FOR ASSISTED HOUSING

The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment directing HUD to establish a self-executing percentage for each HUD program for the eligibility of families whose income is between 50 and 80 percent of median income and to prohibit owners from skipping over lower income families on the waiting list in order to house higher income families. The Senate recedes with an amendment adding anti-skipping language to section 6(c)(4)(A) of the Housing Act of 1937, the provision establishing income-mix requirements for public housing. While the conferees affirm the principle of income mix in assisted housing projects, this amendment (which is necessary in light of the decision in Paris vs. HUD 843 F 2d 561) makes it clear that lower income families on a waiting list may not be skipped over in order to help a higher income family first. However, once a family reaches the top of the waiting list, their assignment to a particular project should be made taking into account the requirement to assure a range of incomes of families living in that particular project. In any case where separate lists have been maintained for families based on their income, the families should be offered housing in the chronological order in which they applied.

PUBLIC HOUSING CHILD CARE GRANTS

The House bill contained an amendment not included in the Senate amendment permitting child care grants to be provided in facilities near public housing projects. The conference report contains the House provision.

PUBLIC HOUSING RESIDENT MANAGEMENT

The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill that applies the requirements of the 1987 Housing Act governing the tenant management of public housing projects to contracts entered into after the date of enactment of the 1987 Act. The conference report contains the Senate amendment.

PUBLIC HOUSING COMPREHENSIVE TRANSITION DEMONSTRATION

The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill which would limit certain income disregard provisions of the demonstration to the Charlotte, NC, housing authority. The conference report does not contain this provision.

PROHIBITION OF REDUCTION OF SECTION 8 CONTRACT RENTS

The House bill contains a provision not included in the Senate amendment which requires HUD to follow the requirements of the 1987 Housing Act and to restore certain Section 8 rents that were reduced after April 15, 1987. The conference report contains this provision amended to require, only in the case of implementing the requirement in FY 1989, Appropriation Act approval.

PROJECT-BASED SECTION 8 ASSISTANCE

The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill which would require HUD to issue regulations governing Section 8 existing project based assistance within 30 days of enactment. The conference agreement contains the Senate provision with a number of amendments designed to ensure that project-based assistance can be used effectively at the local level. The conference report requires that any assistance attached to units in accordance with Section 148 of the 1987 Act maybe renewed by local public housing agencies for two additional five year terms, up to a maximum total of 15 years subject to the availability of funds. The conferees believe these changes are necessary to reconcile the five year term of existing certificates with the realities of lending and underwriting practices. Project-based assistance could also be used in limited circumstances in a newly constructed building as long as non-federal funds are used to construct the building, the unit rents do not exceed the Section 8 existing fair market rents and the use of this authority is within the 15 percent limitation governing PHA discretion. The conferees expect that, in the case of use in a newly constructed project, no exceptions will be given to approve rents in excess of the basic Section 8 existing fair market rent for the area. While HUD is given authority to approve applications for the use of project-based assistance until regulations are issued within one month of enactment, after that date the decision to use 15 percent of all of its Section 8 certificates as project-based lies within the discretion of the housing authority. The conference report directs the HUD Secretary to waive the 15 percent limitation only in two tightly circumscribed cases: the rehabilitation of the Penn Alto Hotel in Altoona, Pennsylvania for use as elderly housing and the settlement of the litigation involving the Cedar Square West project in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

SECTION 8 ASSISTANCE FOR RENTAL REHABILITATION PROJECTS

The Senate amendment contained two provisions not included in the House bill which direct HUD to allocate sufficient Section 8 certificates and vouchers to address physical, and economic displacement of tenants living in projects receiving rental rehabilitation assistance and establishes requirements governing the 10 percent administrative expense limit. The conference report contains the Senate provisions amended to (a) authorize a ten percent exception to the preference rules governing tenant selection under the public housing, Indian housing, voucher and Section 8 certificate programs and (b) provide the HUD Secretary with the authority to establish a higher percentage exception if the Secretary determines it is appropriate for good cause or when the Secretary determines it is necessary to ensure that public housing agencies may assist tenants who would have to pay more than 30 percent of their income for rent after a project received rental rehabilitation assistance, whether the tenant stays in the project or moves. The conference report addresses two critical issues concerning HUD's administration of the rental rehabilitation program. First, the conferees are concerned that some localities do not receive a sufficient number of certificates and vouchers under HUD's current method of allocation to carry out the statutory responsibilities established in section 149 of the 1987 Act. Section 149 mandated that the certificates or vouchers by used to assist tenants who are physically displaced from rental rehabilitation projects. Section 149 also gave local administering agencies the discretion to use certificates or vouchers to assist economically displaced tenants—that is, tenants "who would have to pay more than 30 percent of their adjusted income for rent after rehabilitation whether they choose to remain in, or move from, the project." The conference report directs the Secretary to make such allocation of certificates and vouchers as is necessary to ensure that sufficient resources are available to address the physical or economic displacement of tenants of rental rehabilitation projects. The conferees intend that the Secretary shall estimate the need for Section 8 assistance for tenants in rental rehabilitation buildings annually by survey or other reasonable method. The Secretary shall then ensure that the annual allocation of new certificate and voucher funding for each jurisdiction shall be sufficient to meet the identified needs.

Second, the conference report authorizes a 10 percent exception to the preference rules governing tenant selection under public housing, Indian housing, the voucher, Section 8 moderate rehabilitation and Section certificate programs. The ten percent exception is intended to codify the exception contained in HUD's final rule published on January 15, 1988 implementing the statutory preference requirements for various federal housing programs. The amendment is made necessary by a recent federal district court decision (Drake v. Pierce) invalidating the administratively-created ten percent exception as contrary to Congressional intent. Congress never intended the tenant preference system to be interpreted so rigidly. The conferees believe that the ten percent exception is a valid device for giving public housing agencies the flexibility to tailor the Federal preference to locally defined needs and objectives, including selecting eligible families from the waiting list in the order they have applied. The conferees expect that the good cause exception will be implemented on a PHA by PHA basis after regulations defining the good cause criteria are published for notice and comment. Examples of good cause could be furthering fair housing goals, selecting families from the waiting list in the order they applied or settling litigation.

The conferees note that one of HUD's stated rationales for the exception was to give public housing agencies the discretion to adopt local selection preferences to assist economically displaced tenants residing in rental rehabilitation projects. The conferees are not convinced that the ten percent exception will be sufficient to address such economic displacement. Therefore the conference report authorizes the HUD Secretary to establish a higher than ten percent exception when necessary to avoid the economic harm to or displacement of tenants living in projects about to be modernized with rental rehabilitation assistance. For similar reasons, the conferees endorse the policy established by the Secretary according to the discretion authorized under Section 8(e)(2) which provides that any income eligible tenant living in a project undergoing rehabilitation which is assisted under the Section 8 moderate rehabilitation program could benefit from the Section 8 assistance without regard to the limitations of the preference rule. However any tenant moving into a completed Section 8 moderate rehabilitation project who did not meet the statutory preference requirements could only qualify for assistance if the local government provided eligibility under their ten percent exception or the Secretary raised the percentage for other good cause.

TWEEMILL HOUSE

The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill which requires HUD to process a certain 202 loan. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

PREVENTING FRAUD AND ABUSE

The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill which requires assisted housing applicants to authorize income verification and permits HUD to access State employment records for purposes of income verification. Title IX of the conference report contains the Senate provision with an amendment.

HOUSING COUNSELING

The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment which permitted HUD funded housing counseling for owners of VA guaranteed homes. The conference report contains the House provision.

MULTIFAMILY HOUSING MANAGEMENT AND PRESERVATION

Unsubsidized Projects.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment that required HUD, for projects with unsubsidized HUD-held mortgages, to preserve units that are occupied by low and moderate income tenants on the date of assignment, foreclosure or sale. The conference report contains the House provision amended to cure the discrepancies between the language of subsections 203(a)(1) and 203(d) of the 1978 Amendments. First, the conference report amends subsection 203(a)(1)(C) to require HUD to preserve those units in HUD-held unsubsidized projects that are occupied by low and moderate income tenants on either the date of assignment or the date of foreclosure (whichever date has the greater number of low and moderate income tenants). Second, the conference report amends subsection 203(d) to require HUD, upon sale of HUD-owned formerly unsubsidized projects, to provide Section 8 assistance for those units in such projects that are, on the date title to the project is acquired by HUD, either vacant or occupied by low and moderate income tenants. Finally, the conference report amends subsection 203(d) to require HUD, when HUD-held unsubsidized projects are acquired at foreclosure by owners other than HUD, to provide Section 8 assistance for those units in such projects that are occupied by low and moderate income tenants on either the date of assignment or foreclosure (whichever date has the greater number of low and moderate income tenants).

Right of First Refusal.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment which gave a local government and a designated state agency the right to match the terms and conditions of HUD's disposition plan for a HUD-owned multifamily project. Existing law gives local governments and designated state agencies the right to match an offer made for the purchase of such projects. The conference report contains the House provision amended to outline in greater detail the procedures and requirements that will govern the revised right of first refusal. The conference report requires the Secretary to develop a disposition plan for each HUD-owned project prior to sale. The disposition plan shall specify the Department's minimum terms and conditions for disposition of the project including, most significantly, (1) the initial sales price that is acceptable to the Secretary and (2) the assistance the Secretary plans to make available to a buyer in accordance with the preservation requirements of the 1978 Amendments. The initial sales price shall reflect the value of the project as housing affordable to low and moderate income households for the minimum 15-year period required by subsection 203(d) of the 1987 Amendments. Upon the approval of a disposition plan, the Secretary must notify the local government and the appropriate State agency of the terms and conditions of the disposition plan. These entities then have 90 days in which to make an offer to purchase the project. The Secretary is directed to accept an offer that matches the terms and conditions of the disposition plan. The Secretary is also given the discretion to accept offers that do not match the precise terms and conditions of the disposition plan if the Secretary determines that such offers would further the preservation objectives of Section 203 of the 1978 Amendments. The Secretary, in particular, shall adjust the initial sales price in exchange for an agreement to extend the duration of low income affordability restrictions beyond the 15-year period required by subsection 203(d). If agreement between HUD and the appropriate local and State agencies cannot be reached within 90 days, HUD shall be free to offer the project to the general public. The conferees fully expect that the Secretary will use his discretion to negotiate the terms and conditions of the disposition plan. In evaluating offers made by local governments and State agencies, the Secretary shall give serious consideration to offers that envision the imposition of long term or perpetual low income restrictions.

The conference report also prohibits any local government or designated State agency from transferring projects acquired under a right of first refusal to a private entity unless such transfer is accomplished by a public solicitation process. The Secretary shall establish criteria for the solicitation process. Those criteria shall include a requirement that prospective owners agree to extend the low income affordability restrictions beyond the 15 year period required by subsection 203(d). The conference report makes these amendments to ensure that the right of first refusal not be used to enable localities and States to act as conduits for private developers and other entities which would otherwise be required to participate in a competitive bidding process. The underlying rationale for the right of first refusal is to achieve long-term low-income use of these projects through the development of creative financing and ownership arrangements that include governmental entities. Throughout the nation, localities and States are experimenting with a variety of effective, new contractual arrangements. Some enable government entities to impose perpetual use restrictions in return for incentives such as subsidized mortgages or reduced property taxes. Others link increased density for one project in return for long term low income affordability restrictions in another project. The conferees intend to encourage these innovative techniques as a partial solution to the problems of inventory loss associated with previous federal housing programs. The conference report directs the Secretary to provide Congress, within one year of the enactment of this Act, with a report detailing cases in which local and state governments have exercised their right of first refusal.

The conferees are also aware of property sales made to local governments that subsequently demolish the project and reduce the housing available for low and moderate income families. The conferees expect HUD to avoid such demolition unless the project is unfit for rehabilitation or the rehabilitation would cost substantially more than constructing new housing.

Definition of Subsidized Project.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment which tightened the definition of a "subsidized project" for purposes of the multifamily preservation requirements. The conference report contains the House provision and reaffirms the explanation contained in the House report.

Transfer of Legal Title.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment which would apply the preservation requirements of the 1987 Act to all HUD owned property where legal title had not transferred prior to February 5, 1988. The conference report does not contain the House provision. The conferees understand that no legal title has yet to transfer in the sale involving the Thornwood Apartment project in Chicago Heights, Illinois, and that the City of Chicago Heights has filed a lawsuit against the Department in an effort to exercise the right of first refusal. The conferees believe that HUD, as a fair settlement of the litigation, should (1) reevaluate the disposition plan governing Thornwood and (2) provide to the City of Chicago Heights the opportunity to exercise a right of first refusal in accordance with the amendments made by this Act. The conferees reemphasize that the conference report prohibits any local government or designated State agency from transferring projects acquired under a right of first refusal to a private entity unless such transfer is accomplished by a public solicitation process.

Assignment.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment which clarified that the management and preservation requirements apply to projects assigned to HUD before or after February 5, 1988. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment to provide that where HUD does not possess any records identifying low income occupancy on the date of assignment, occupancy data should be provided based on a date within 120 days of enactment of this Act.

Exemption from Preservation Requirements.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment which exempted the disposition of the Cedar Square West project in Minneapolis, Minnesota, from the preservation requirements of Section 203 of the 1987 Amendments. The conference report contains the House provision amended to provide that for those 250 project-based certificates offered by the Secretary in settlement of litigation involving Cedar Square West, the Secretary, notwithstanding the statutory preference rules, shall give preference for this Section 8 assistance to those tenants either on the waiting list for Cedar Square West or living in the project in over-crowded conditions.

MULTIFAMILY CAPITAL IMPROVEMENTS

The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment requiring $50 million of the funds appropriated for the flexible subsidy program to be used for capital improvement loans. The conference report contains the House provision amended to require the lesser of $30 million or 40 percent of flexible subsidy funds to be used for this purpose and to require HUD to issue regulations for the Capital Improvement Loan Program by February 5, 1989, one year after the program was authorized by Congress. The conference report also permits the Secretary to use funds earmarked for capital improvement loans for other purposes of the Flexible Subsidy Fund if the earmarked funds are not used before the last 60 days of a fiscal year.

REFINANCING STATE FINANCED SECTION 8 PROJECTS

The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment providing that when State financed Section 8 projects that received a financial adjustment factor are refinanced, 50 percent of the recaptured Section 8 funds shall be available for use by State financed agencies to provide affordable housing to very low income persons. The conference report contains the House provision, amended to require approval of this use of funds in an Appropriations Act.

SUBTITLE B—PRESERVATION OF LOW INCOME HOUSING

Notice to Tenants.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment which (a) required owners of FHA insured and subsidized projects that plan to prepay the mortgage to submit to the project tenants copies of the intent to prepay and the plan of action and (b) gave tenants the opportunity to comment on the plan. The conference report contains a substitute for the House provision since it was clear in the conference report on the 1987 Act that the conferees expected the HUD Secretary to issue regulations requiring procedures for meaningful consultation with affected tenants. In order to play a useful role in this process tenants must have access to relevant information such as the plan of action. The conference report, therefore, amends Section 232 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 to require that the Secretary's Report to Congress (due February 5, 1989) describe in detail the steps taken to assure meaningful participation by affected tenants. This information will be critical to Congress when it considers a longer term solution to the crisis addressed for a 2-year period in the 1987 Act.

Plan of Action.—The Senate amendment contained a number of provisions not included in the House bill which amended the requirements of the plan of action required of owners planning to prepay certain FHA insured mortgages. These provisions require HUD (a) to provide owners any relevant market area and demographic information the Secretary has than the owner can use in preparing the plan of action; and (b) to limit the amount of appraisal, market area and demographic information required when an owner is requesting incentives in order to extend low income use of the property. The conference report contains the Senate provisions.

Incentives to Extend Low Income Use.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment which clarified that financial incentives can be provided only when low income restrictions are extended through the original term of the mortgage. The conference agreement contains the House provision amended to clarify that incentives may be provided when the low income affordability restrictions are extended (a) through the term of the original mortgage by modification of the existing mortgage or regulatory agreement or (b) in the case of a prepayment, through a period of time equivalent to the remaining term of the original mortgage by a recorded instrument. The recorded instrument must also ensure that additional restrictions contained in the original regulatory agreement are applied to projects which "prepay with incentives".

Rent Increase Criteria for Approval of Plan of Action.—The Senate amendment contained a provision not inlcuded in the House bill clarifying that the Secretary may not use the availability of vouchers or certificates as a reason for finding that a plan of action does not materially increase the economic hardship of low-income tenants or involuntarily displace current tenants where comparable and affordable housing is not available. The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment to clarify the limit on the amount of rent increases that can be established in an approved plan of action. The conference report contains the Senate provision and the House provision amended to insure the annual rent increase for tenants will not exceed 10 percent.

Eligible Low Income Housing.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment which applied the prepayment limitations to State insured federally assisted 236 projects. The conference agreement contains this provision.

Rural Housing Prepayment.—The Senate bill contained a provision that was not contained in the House bill requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to promulgate regulations establishing criteria for selecting a purchaser of a project subject to the prepayment provisions in existing law when more than one prospective qualified purchaser has made a bona fide offer to purchase; and to provide in such regulations a priority to those organizations or agencies having the most experience in managing or developing low income housing or community development projects and having the longest record of community service. This provision also (1) clarified the definition of a nonprofit organization to prevent such an organization from purchasing prepaid projects if it has among its officers or directorate persons with a material interest in Section 515 loans that have been prepaid; and (2) clarified the definition of a local nonprofit organization to mean one which (a) has a broad, varied interest board of directors, and (b) is a charitable organization having a principal purpose of developing or managing low income housing or community development projects. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

It has come to the conferees attention that the Farmers Home Administration is accepting the prepayment of Section 515 loans whenever Section 515 owners who are receiving assistance from HUD under the Section 8 program agree to renew their Section 8 contracts for the remaining term of the original Housing Assistance Payment contract. It is the conferees understanding that in so doing, FmHA is assuming that the continuation of the Section 8 contract automatically satisfies the prepayment conditions set out in Section 241(G)(ii) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987, namely, that the prepayment will not materially affect the housing opportunities of minorities and that no displacement of current tenants will occur as a result of the prepayment. The conferees wish to make clear that the practice of automatically accepting the prepayment of loans of projects receiving Section 8 assistance is contrary to Section 241(G)(ii) and that the FmHA must make its determination on the prepayment or refinancing of the loan notwithstanding the existence of a Section 8 contract.

Section 8 Loan Management Program.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment requiring that when a Section 8 loan management contract expires, HUD must offer to extend the contract or offer new project-based loan management assistance not vouchers or certificates. The conference report contains the House provision with a series of amendments. First, the conference report requires that the eligibility of a multifamily residential project for loan management assistance be determined without regard to whether the project is subsidized or unsubsidized under under the National Housing Act. Second, the conference report allows the Secretary, in allocating loan management assistance, to give priority to a project only if the project has serious financial problems that are likely to result in a claim on the insurance fund in the near future or is eligible for incentives under Subtitle B of the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987. Finally, the conference report strikes Section 8(v)(1) of the Housing Act of 1937, the provision requiring that each contract for LMSA assistance be for a term of 180 months.

The first two amendments are made necessary by the adoption of a recent HUD/OMB policy that gives first priority for LMSA use to "subsidized" projects. The policy has had the effect of excluding otherwise eligible unsubsidized projects from consideration for LMSA assistance. The conferees intend to reaffirm the policy defined in existing regulations concerning the establishment of priorities for LMSA assistance and to assure that such assistance can be provided in accordance with the Emergency Low Income Presentation Act of 1987.

Section 262 of the 1987 Housing contained a number of provisions designed to induce owners to extend or renew their participation in the Section 8 program. It has come to the attention of the Conference Committee that HUD is interpreting those provisions in ways that defeat the purpose of extending assistance and in some cases result in the cancellation of contracts and the loss of scarce housing subsidies that are critical to facilitating the preservation of low-income housing.

However, in recognition that some owners of Section 8 projects might still elect not to extend their contracts at end of a term, the Act requires in such instances that tenants be provided a one-year notice by the owner. This long lead time is designed not only to give the tenants time to find other quarters if it should become necessary for them to move, but also to give HUD time within which to assure that the proposed termination of the Section 8 assistance is lawful and to attempt to work out with the owner a means of preserving the housing for low-income use. In some cases HUD has refused to consider contract extensions or Section 8 LMSA adjustments until after the one-year notice has been given. This policy is detrimental because it could cause unnecessary alarm to tenants in the case of owners willing to negotiate a renewal. HUD should encourage owners to work with HUD prior to the one-year deadline and HUD should reach agreements prior to that date so that termination notices may be avoided.

In addition until recently, HUD has premitted Section 8 contracts to be extended at the end of a term for a period shorter than five years, with the option for the owner to renew for subsequent terms up to the maximum total term originally contemplated by the contract. These shorter renewals have enabled owners, who might otherwise be reluctant to renew their contracts for a five-year term, to keep their housing for continued low-income use.

HUD has now stopped permitting renewals for less than five-year terms, on the basis that to do so would be a violation of the low-income housing preservation principles of the 1987 Act. Unfortunately, this policy may have the opposite effect, by driving some owners to terminate sooner than they might have otherwise. The conferees want to make it absolutely clear that nothing contained in the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987 was intended to be interpreted by HUD as barring the renewal of Section 8 contracts for periods of less than five years, and the Department is directed to permit shorter than five-year extensions of Section 8 contracts with the option for the owner to renew for subsequent terms up to the maximum total term originally contemplated by the contract. Where a project owner refuses to agree to an extension or new LMSA contract, the conferees expect HUD to continue the practice of providing vouchers or certificates to eligible tenants.

Finally, the conferees are aware that HUD has refused to implement the provisions of Section 8(c)(10) regarding increases in permissible Section 8 LMSA rents resulting in the cancellation of LMSA contracts and the provision of vouchers to tenants. This provision was created to avoid this very scenario. The conferees direct HUD to implement all of the provisions of Section 262 of the 1987 Act in ways that assure the preservation of assisted housing through the continuation of project-based Section 8 assistance, not in ways that defeat that purpose.

LEASE AND GRIEVANCE

On August 30, 1988, the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) issued regulations that made changes in the lease and grievance procedures governing federally assisted public housing.

While Congress changed the law in 1983 to permit the grievance procedure to exclude evictions where a local jurisdiction provides a hearing in court which meets the basic elements of due process, the purpose was to simplify procedures for eviction, particularly when it was clear that a tenant was a threat to the health and safety of other tenants, was conducting illegal activities or had repeatedly violated provisions of his lease such as the requirement to pay rent.

However, Congress is seriously concerned that the recent regulations would weaken principles of fairness and due process that have been painstakingly developed over 20 years as a result of legislative and judicial actions. The regulations eliminated requirements for procedures to assure that tenants could grieve unfair agency actions and tenants that made repairable mistakes, if given time and a fair hearing, could correct those errors.

The Committee is particularly dismayed that HUD has "respectfully demurred" to Congress' intent as stated in the conference report on the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 regarding the right of a tenant to file a grievance against a PHA for its failure to act. That report clearly specified that "Congress has always intended that the mandatory public housing grievance procedure apply to failures to act, such as failure to maintain housing in decent condition, failure to provide timely subsidy increases when incomes drop, or failure to provide appropriate utility allowances." The report directed HUD to revise their regulations to be consistent with the ruling in Samuels v. District of Columbia, in which the court specifically held that disputes regarding a PHA's refusal to act, as well as its affirmative actions, must be grievable. Concerns have been raised that the changes included in the August 30th regulations would deny tenants the opportunity to be heard when they: ask for a transfer for medical or other reasons, but the public housing authority (PHA) refuses; request repairs or heat in the winter but the PHA refuses. In addition, elderly tenants would be denied the right to appeal an agency decision to deny their request to have a live-in aide stay with them when they need one to continue to live independently. If the head of a household leaves or dies, the remaining members of the family would no longer have a right to remain in their homes a right explicitly defined in the case of Arsenault v. Chicopee Housing Authority (44NE2nd968). The regulations would not require a 30-day notice for rent increases and eliminate an opportunity for tenants to comment on proposed changes in the lease or grievance procedures.

The regulations also provide that where a grievance procedure is followed a tenant would be bound by decision in the PHA's favor but the PHA will not be bound by decision in the tenant's favor where the grievance is not required by the regulations. The 14-day actual notice requirement is short circuited when the notice is mailed, since HUD eliminated the 5-day allowance for mailing time. Other basic principles of due process that were eliminated in the new regulations were permitting the grievance hearing officer to make factual determinations on the basis of general knowledge and hearsay instead of on evidence presented at the hearing which the tenant has notice and an opportunity to challenge. Finally the principles in the regulations HUD proposes to use to determine whether State laws conform to due process are inadequate since among other principles they do not require judges trained in the law, do not allow tenants discovery prior to the hearing and do not recognize a warranty of habitability.

Since the regulations were published in late August, these issues concerning the HUD lease and grievance regulation were brought forward late in the consideration of this bill. The conferees are unable to evaluate the validity of these concerns. However, in the interest of fairness and equity the conferees believe that there should be further opportunity for an airing of these concerns, and consideration of these issues by HUD in the HUD rulemaking for this rule. For this purpose, the conference report provides that the HUD Lease and Grievance Rule published on August 30, 1988 (53 Federal Register 33216) shall be made effective as an Interim Rule with an extended period of time for public comment, which should extend for not less than 60 days or until March 1, 1989 whichever occurs later. Following the opportunity for public comment, the conferees expect HUD to give a fair and full consideration and evaluation of the concerns raised in the comment period and in this report, including amending the regulations to accommodate the principles enunciated in the Samuels case.

SUBTITLE C—RURAL HOUSING

Section 502 Guaranteed Loan Demonstration.—The House bill contained a provision not contained in the Senate bill requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the rural housing guaranteed loan demonstration authorized in the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 using funds made available for Section 502 loans in Appropriations Acts of the Congress for Fiscal year 1989 and, as may be necessary for each succeeding fiscal year. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment that directs the Secretary of Agriculture to implement regulations within 4 months after the date of enactment providing for the Farmers Home Guaranteed Loan program. The conferees are concerned that the Farmers Home Administration has been reluctant to carry out the rural housing guaranteed program without further congressional directive. This demonstration would go far toward testing a concept that the Administration and others have been pressing for some time. This concept would substitute guarantees for direct lending and thus reduce outlays as well as budget authority from the Rural Housing Insurance Fund. While the conferees still believe that the concept has to be tested and do not necessarily endorse a wide-scale guarantee program in lieu of direct loans the conferees believe it would be worthwhile to try this limited demonstration. To that end the conferees have directed the Secretary to issue regulations so that the demonstration may be implemented not more than 120 days from the date of enactment.

Section 515 Rents.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate bill deleting the requirement that called for the use of comparables in determining rent adjustments in the Section 515 Rural Rental Housing program. The conference report contains the House provision.

Section 514/516 Farm Labor Housing.—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate bill to permit domestic farm labor housing to be utilized by Section 515 eligible tenants if such housing is no longer needed for farm labor housing in the area or the need has so diminished that the purpose of providing farm labor housing can no longer be met. The conference report contains the House provision.

Legal Representation—The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate bill to allow the Secretary of Agriculture the discretion to select the United States District Attorney, the General Counsel for the Department of Agriculture, or any other attorney to handle Section 502 foreclosure cases. The conference report contains the House provision with an amendment which clarifies that the use of private attorneys is permitted where it is cost-effective and where it either expedites foreclosure proceedings or contributes to the preservation of the affected housing. The amendment also requires the Secretary to submit to Congress an annual report on the use of private attorneys.

The Committee took this action upon learning of a growing backlog of foreclosure cases in some Farmers Home Administration State offices. The result of this backlog of foreclosure cases delayed the expeditious disposition of Farmers Home Administration-held single-family housing units. Within the constraints that the Committee has included in the legislation, the Committee urges the Secretary to act expeditiously to reduce any such foreclosure backlogs where they exist. However, it is not the intention of the Committee to encourage generally the use of non-government attorneys, but to do so only where legitimate backlogs require such action in order to facilitate timely disposition.

Rural Rental Rehabilitation Program.—The Senate bill contained a provision not included in the House bill which authorizes areas located in States where the Secretary of HUD administers the Section 17 Rental Rehabilitation Grant program to be eligible to receive funding and to participate in the Rural Rental Rehabilitation Demonstration program pursuant to Section 311 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

SUBTITLE D—MORTGAGE INSURANCE AND SECONDARY MORTGAGE MARKET PROGRAMS

Use of Single Family Mortgage Insurance by Investors—The House bill contained a provision not contained in the Senate amendment that permits investors to refinance an FHA-insured single family mortgage and does not limit the new mortgage to 75 percent of the value of the property if the monthly mortgage payments are reduced. The conference report contains the House provision.

Clarification of FHA Assumption Policy—The House bill contained two provisions not contained in the Senate amendment that clarify procedures applicable to the assumption of FHA-insured mortgages. The conference report contains the House provisions.

Home Equity Mortgage Demonstration Program—The House bill contained a provision not contained in the Senate amendment that deletes the provision under the Home Equity Conversion Demonstration that a mortgage be secured by a dwelling whose value is not greater than the FHA single family mortgage limits while retaining the provision that the actual home equity conversion mortgage cannot be greater than the maximum permitted under the FHA single family program. The conference report contains the House provision.

Reciprocity in Approval of Housing Subdivisions—The House bill contained a provision not contained in the Senate bill to permit the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to consider the issuance of a certificate of reasonable value on the part of the Administration of the Veterans Affairs to be an administrative approval for subdivisions under the Federal Housing Administration Sec. 203 mortgage insurance program for the purpose of complying with the reciprocity of subdivision regulations in existing law for a one-year period from the date of enactment of this Act. Also, this provision calls for a report by the HUD Secretary on subdivision approval policies and practices of HUD, VA and the Farmers Home Administration, focussing on the administration of environmental laws in connection with such policies and practices, as well as recommendations to achieve complete reciprocity of subdivision approval. The conferees are concerned, however, that during this one-year period, the Secretary take steps to assure that HUD approvals under current practice will not result in insuring housing in obvious questionable locations and circumstances when there would be adverse environmental and underwriting impacts. The conferees wish to make clear that the notion of reciprocity is based on minimum environmental and underwriting standards that safeguard the interest of the federal government. The VA elimination of subdivision regulations and reliance on applicable local regulations that are less strict than the FHA standards significantly changes the situation that existed in prior years.

This practice is reported to be occurring in instances where only three of four homes in a large subdivision will be VA-guaranteed, whereas the remainder are FHA-insured. This is not what Congress intended when it approved reciprocity. Congress intends that environmental and related laws be adhered to and sound underwriting practices be employed in the several Federal guarantee, insurance and loan programs. The conferees expect the Secretary of HUD to move expeditiously to undertake the subject study and report and in doing so to work with the VA and FmHA, as well as the industry, so that a workable policy regarding subdivision regulation that safeguard the public interest may be developed and enacted into law as soon as possible.

Regulation of Rents in Insured Projects—The House bill contained a provision not contained in the Senate amendment that clarifies that owners of certain FHA-insured multifamily projects must have executed agreements by December 1, 1987, to implement changes permitted by the April 1983 or June 1986 regulations. The conference report does not contain the House provision.

Multifamily Second Mortgages.—The House bill contains a provision not in the Senate amendment that makes permanent the authority of the Federal National Mortgage Association and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation to purchase multifamily second mortgages. The conference report contains the House provision.

Payment on FHA Preforeclosure Sales.-The House bill contained a provision not included in the Senate amendment that permits the Secretary to pay claims on losses from single family preforeclosure sales under the FHA mortgage insurance program. The conference report contains the House provision.

While the conferees recognize that there are circumstances where the sale of a property prior to actual foreclosure would be in the best interest of the mortgagor, as well as result in reductions of HUD property disposition costs, there are several safeguards that the conferees believe should be followed by the Department.

Before pursuing the preforeclosure sale, the mortgagor should be at least 3 months delinquent. The mortgagor should be advised of the HUD assignment program, and has either decided not to apply for the program or HUD has determined that the mortgagor would not be eligible to participate. And finally, HUD should not permit a preforeclosure sale for less than 75 percent of the outstanding balance so as not to create a fire-sale atmosphere.

The conferees urge HUD to utilize these safeguards when developing the regulations in carrying out this provision.

SUBTITLE E—COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT AND MISCELLANEOUS PROGRAMS

City and County Classifications—The House bill contained a provision requiring HUD to use current data (not 1980 census data) when determining the loss of entitlement status for metropolitan cities and urban counties for the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) program. The Senate contained no similar provision. The conference report contains the House provision.

The conferees, in accepting the provision that became Section 522 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987, intended that the same city-recognized area that was made eligible for the use of Section 8 funds under Section 522 would be the applicable area for determining the eligibility of activities to be funded from the allocation of community development funds under Section 522.

Anti-Displacement Provision—The House bill contained a provision that clarifies the certification requirements for non-entitlement communities. The Senate contained no similar provision. The conference report contains the House provision. As part of the final package in the 1987 Act, House and Senate conferees agreed to insert the following language in order to clarify the intent of the anti-displacement provision.

The intent of the anti-displacement provision is that a locality would be required to replace lost low-income housing units with decent, safe and sanitary units that are affordable to low and moderate tenants for 10 years, unless the Secretary finds that there is available in the area an adequate supply of habitable affordable housing for low and moderate income persons. The Secretary shall base his determination upon objective information, which shall include (1) the supply of vacant existing housing meeting the Section 8 quality standards with rents that are affordable to low and moderate income persons; and (2) the number of eligible families on the waiting lists for public housing or housing assisted under Section 8. In making this determination, the Secretary should provide an opportunity for interested parties, including organizations representing tenants, non-profit organizations and others, to provide information which the Secretary should consider in making this determination.

The term "area" in this section would mean the area within the political boundaries of the grantee unless the Secretary finds that such boundaries are inappropriate in the case of a project located near the boundary of a community, in which case, the Secretary would have the discretion to define the boundaries of the area to be considered which may extend into nearby communities.

CDBG Funds for Assessments—The House bill contained a provision that permits the use of CDBG funds to pay the assessments required of low and moderate income homeowners to recover the capital cost of public improvements. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision. The conference report does not contain this provision since it would be redundant. This change has been made permanent in law through the recently passed Appropriations Act.

FLOOD INSURANCE

The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill requiring provisions of the Federal Flood Insurance Program to apply to the Sacramento, California, metropolitan area based on flood elevation determinations made by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), which are in effect on the date of enactment. This provision would be effective prior to 1 year after the date that the Secretary of Army submits to the Congress the report on the feasibility study on Northern California streams and the American River Watershed but not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

The conference report contains the Senate provision with the following amendments: the FEMA flood elevation requirements would remain in effect in the Sacramento area prior to the expiration of 2 years after the date on which the Secretary of the Army reports on the feasibility study but no later than 4 years after the date of enactment of this act; and FEMA would be directed to prepare a hydrological study of Miles Creek, California, to use as a basis for the establishment of revised flood elevations in and near Planada, California. The Flood Insurance rate map in effect on September 1, 1988, for the area in or near such community shall remain in effect until such study is completed.

HOME MORTGAGE DISCLOSURE

The House bill contained a provision that clarified the date for the implementation of the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act provisions in the 1987 Act. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision. The conference report contains a further clarification that implements the new reporting requirements beginning on August 19, 1988, the date on which the regulations pertaining to the 1987 Act were published in the Federal Register. Thereafter, the reporting requirements are yearly.

LEAD-BASED PAINT POISONING PREVENTION

The Senate amendment contained a number of changes to the 1987 amendments to the Lead-Based Paint Poisoning Prevention Act of 1971. The House bill contained no similar provisions. The conference report contains Senate provisions with a series of amendments as described below.

The conference report seeks to ensure that the testing and abatement of lead-based paint in public housing proceed in accordance with the most reliable, safe and effective techniques currently available. The conference report provisions attempt to clarify the legal requirements of the 1987 Act (especially in light of the confusion and misunderstanding caused by the promulgation of HUD regulations on June 6, 1988) and incorporate more sophisticated information about the relative safety and efficacy of testing, abatement and disposal methods than was available to the Congress when it developed the 1987 legislation.

Transitional Testing and Abatement in Public Housing Receiving CIAP Assistance.—The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill circumscribing the inventory for which testing and abatement will be required in the period preceding completion of the abatement demonstration program. The Senate provision amended the 1987 Act in five significant ways. First, it required only public housing agencies receiving CIAP funding under Section 14 of the 1937 Act to proceed with testing and abatement in those public housing units undergoing comprehensive modernization. Second, it restricted the number of units and other areas which need to be inspected to (a) a random sample of typical leaded surfaces of dwellings and common areas in CIAP-assisted projects and (b) each dwelling in a project determined under a random sample to have lead-based paint hazards, except that the Secretary is authorized, in lieu of the inspection of each unit, to abate the surfaces of all units in the project that correspond to the surfaces in the random sample determined to have such hazards. Third, it required that the inspection of public housing undergoing comprehensive modernization be completed in accordance with the modernization schedule of the particular project. Fourth, it allowed public housing agencies to elect to abate lead-based paint and dust containing lead under standards more stringent (including the Consumer Product Safety Commission standard) than that established by the 1987 Act and made such abatement activities eligible for CIAP assistance. Finally, it authorized industrial hygienists or local public health officials, as well as a qualified inspector, to conduct the final inspection and certification required by law.

The conference report contains the Senate amendment amended to (a) delete the reference to "typical leaded surfaces" in defining what units need to be inspected and (b) clarify that a public housing agency may elect to test for lead-based paint using the atomic absorption spectroscopy (AAS) method. The conferees intend that public housing agencies have the legal authority to use the AAS method and the Consumer Product Safety Commission standard for their abatement activities, regardless of whether the State, city or county has established a parts per million (ppm) or by weight standard for measuring lead-in-paint content. The conferees expect that the Department will amend its notice of September 21, 1988, accordingly.

Abatement Demonstration Program.—The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill amending the abatement demonstration program established by the 1987 Act. The Senate provision expanded the scope of the demonstration program by requiring the Secretary to (a) include public housing in the demonstration and (b) prepare and include in the report to Congress (due upon completion of the abatement demonstration program) a comprehensive and workable plan for the cost-effective inspection and abatement of all public housing. The Senate provision also specified in greater detail the issues to be examined in the report to Congress. The conference report contains the Senate provision amended to require the Secretary to (a) examine the merits of an interim containment policy for public housing dwellings that are determined to have lead-based paint hazards but for which CIAP funding is not available and (b) include in the report to Congress an estimate of the total costs associated with testing and abating lead-based paint in public housing in accordance with the time-table set by the Act. The conferees believe that the containment option could be a temporary back-up for lead paint problems to be implemented between the time the hazard is discovered and the time funding for total abatement may be made available.

The conferees are aware that the Department of Housing and Urban Development has expressed some concern that adding public housing to the demonstration will delay implementation and completion of the demonstration program. The conferees do not expect a delay due to this expansion and recommend that HUD simply issue another request for a proposal that deals solely with the public housing property. The conferees expect this portion of the demonstration to use funds from the CIAP program as the conferees understand that funds from the FHA insurance fund could not be used for this purpose.

Public Housing Inspection.—The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill requiring the testing and abatement of all public housing not presently receiving CIAP assistance within 5 years of the date the report on the abatement demonstration is due. The provision restricted the number of units and other areas which need to be inspected to (a) a random sample of typical leaded surfaces of dwellings and common areas in all projects not presently assisted with CIAP and (b) each dwelling in a project determined under a random sample to have lead-based paint hazards, except that the Secretary is authorized, in lieu of the inspection of each unit, to abate the surfaces of all units in the project that correspond to the surfaces in the random sample determined to have such hazards. The provision also allowed the Secretary to prioritize inspections, within the five-year period, on the basis of vacancy, age of housing or projected modernization or rehabilitation. Finally, the provision incorporated certain requirements in existing law (as amended by this Act) governing abatement and final inspection and certification. The conference report contains the Senate provision amended to delete the reference to "typical leaded surfaces" in the definition of what units need to be inspected.

Funding—The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill requiring the Secretary to submit annually to Congress an estimate of the funds required to carry out the lead-based paint provisions. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

Interim Guidelines.—The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill requiring the Secretary to issue temporary procedures for the safe and effective detection, abatement and disposal of lead-based paint hazards in CIAP-assisted public housing. The conference report does not contain the Senate provision since (a) the HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations FY 1989 Act already directs HUD to establish appropriate protocols for testing, abatement and disposal of leaded materials in public housing and (b) the HUD Notice of September 21, 1988, establishes interim guidelines for such activity. The conferees particularly applaud the Notice's "advice" that abatement be confined to the removal or encapsulation of contaminated surfaces and the high efficiency vaccuum removal of leaded dust until safer guidelines and techniques are identified through further study. The conferees expect that the National Institute of Building Sciences (NIBS) will be able to develop guidelines and standards for the testing and abatement of lead-based paint by February, 1989, in accordance with the timetable set by the Appropriations Act. The conferees urge NIBS to be as precise and clear as possible in recommending such guidelines and standards. The conferees note that the NIBs process does not relieve HUD of its obligations under the abatement demonstration program and expect that the NIBS guidelines and standards will most likely be amended in response to the findings of the abatement demonstration program. And finally, the conferees recommend that the National Institute of Building Sciences seriously consider utilizing the testing and abatement standards mandated by the State of Maryland and presently being used successfully in the City of Baltimore as long as these standards are consistent with the statutory language.

Detection Technique.—The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill adding atomic absorption spectroscopy as a detection method and authorizing laboratories to certify the inspection results. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

Consultation.—The Senate amendment contained a provision not included in the House bill requiring HUD, in preparing reports and regulations, to consult additionally with the Environmental Protection Agency, the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences, the Centers for Disease Control, the Consumer Product Safety Commission, major public housing organizations and other major housing organizations. The conference report contains the Senate provision.

Interpretation of Section.—The conference report contains a provision clarifying that Section 302 of the Lead-based Paint Poisoning Prevention Act may not be construed to affect the responsibilities of the Environmental Protection Agency with respect to the protection of the public health from hazards posed by lead-based paint.

The conferees expect the Environmental Protection Agency to play a stronger role in dealing with the national problem of lead-based paint. EPA has extensive technical expertise in all aspects of dealing with toxics in the environment: detection, sources of contamination, exposure routes, health effects, toxicity, control strategies, persistence in the environment and cleanup and disposal standards. With respect to lead in particular EPA has done extensive research which is directly applicable to lead-based paint and which should be used in the development of Federal policies and procedures to deal with that problem.

While HUD has been given direct responsibility for funding the 18 month demonstration it is clear that EPA also must take an active role in assisting HUD in the development of a regulatory strategy and standards to address the serious environmental health problem nationwide. To the extent practical, HUD should consult EPA in the design and execution of the demonstration in order to produce the most meaningful and comprehensive results and EPA should consider conducting research as well as developing studies in conjunction with the HUD demonstration.

DEWILDE POOL

In 1973, HUD and a number of State and local housing agencies reached agreement on how to utilize unexpended balances that have built-up in the Section 236 program. These so-called "DeWilde" pool agreements outlined what specific projects in the recipient States could be funded with the unexpended balances of Section 236 funds. Over the years HUD and the agencies have disagreed over which projects could receive the DeWilde pool funds.

Section 430 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987 resolved this issue. Section 430 clearly states that the DeWilde funds—when released—would be utilized for any existing 236 project within a recipient State.

It is the understanding of the conferees that the DeWilde pool funds have been previously obligated and that instructions for their release are clearly stated in Section 430 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987. Section 430 requires HUD to release the DeWilde pool funds once "approved in Appropriation Acts." The conferees fully expect the Secretary to comply with the clear intent of Section 430.

REPORT ON RADON IN HUD MULTIFAMILY HOUSING

The conferees are concerned that radon contamination poses a significant health hazard. EPA and the Surgeon General have recommended the testing of most housing for radon but multifamily housing was not included in the EPA sample.

The conferees are also aware that HUD had stated that their lack of response to the radon problem was due to their not having a direct statutory mandate. Therefore the conference report contains a provision necessary to enable HUD develop a radon policy for multifamily housing.

The provision requires the Department of Housing and Urban Development to develop a Departmental policy for dealing with radon contamination in multifamily housing and to utilize the Environmental Protection Agency guidelines and standards in developing this policy. It specifies that the housing to be covered in developing the policy is multifamily housing owned by the Department of Housing and Urban Development, receiving assistance through the public or Indian housing programs, project-based Section 8 housing or housing assisted under Section 236 or Section 221(d)(3).

The policy to be developed to deal with radon contamination should specify programs for education, research testing, as well as the mitigation of radon hazards in federally-owned or assisted multifamily housing.

In developing the report which is due one year after enactment, the Department of HUD should coordinate their efforts with EPA and other appropriate federal agencies, as well as State and local governments and other appropriate groups and experts.

Funds for the development of this policy are to come from within the Department resources but not any one fund should be required to fund the majority of the policy study.
